

SUPPLEMENT TO THE ROYAL GAZETTE.

[Volume VIII.]

TUESDAY, 9th APRIL, 1822

[Number 6.]

The divine Author of our religion no sooner entered upon his public ministry, than he began to prepare for the establishment of his Church. He chose from among those who followed him twelve disciples, and after them seventy others of an inferior order, whom he sent to preach in his name. And before he left the world, that no sanction of authority might be wanting to those who were to administer the affairs of his Church, that they might appear as ambassadors in his name, furnished with full and clear credentials, he appointed the eleven Apostles to meet him on the mountain, which had been the scene of his former humiliation and agony, and was now to become the theatre of his glory.—And there, when he was just about to enter into his rest, he gave them a solemn and formal commission, founded on the authority which he had received from his Father, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."† The first public act which is recorded of these Apostles after their Lord's ascension, was to preserve the integrity of that high order to which Christ had appointed them, (Acts i. 15, 16.) And as he delivered an outward commission to his disciples, so we find them proceeding in the same method. As the Church increased in numbers and extent, or, as their fellow labourers were removed by persecution and death, they ordained others in the various orders of the ministry; and invested them with the power, which they had themselves received immediately from Christ himself, to preach his word, administer his sacraments, perform the services of religion, and each in their several offices, to maintain the unity of the faith in the bond of peace.† Into this Church, or society under the government of the Apostles, all who were converted by their preaching were baptized: all were required to pay obedience to its institutions, and hold communion in its prayers and ordinances; "they continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers; and the Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved."‡ Here then I trace the establishment of an outward and visible Church: I mark the care and earnestness of our heavenly Master to institute a ministry charged with all the powers and authority of a divine commission; I observe the attention of the Apostles to keep up the orders and institutions of the Church, and to perpetuate them to the end of time: and I cannot after this believe a matter of indifference, whether I belong to any Church, or whether I belong to a false Church or to the true.

† Matt. xxiii. 2, 3. ‡ Acts xviii. 18, 19, 20. ‡ Ephes. vi. 1, 2. ‡ Acts ii. 42, 47.
