

WINTER.

At this chill time, while stormy winter reigns, And driven snow lies scattered on the plains; While bitter tempests howl with furious dread And search each crevice of the peasant's shed; At this bleak home the poor are doomed to know. The cutting pangs of undeserved woe; To feel the sorrows that from want arise, While famine waits when craving nature cries. Bereft of means to earn their food each day, They pine unknown their humble woes away. Ye sons of fortune, blest with happy lot, Go view the misery of the poor man's cot; See how distress bows down a father's head, While hungry infants call aloud for bread; See the low mother, sickly and oppress'd, Weep o'er her child half famish'd at her breast; Go, view this scene, and teach your hearts to feel The force, the claim of poverty's appeal. O! Charity, sweet nymph of every grace, Extend thy arm to cheer a drooping race. Raise up the wretched from their pining state, And yield thy aid where want and death await.
