SENTENCE OF DEATH.

The following is the substance of the address of Judge PARBLE to Seth Elliot, on pronouncing sentence of death on him, at the Supreme Judicial Court, lately held at Casine.

ADDRESS.

After a patient and full hearing of the testimony, and the argument of your counsel, who have so ably defended you, the jury of your own selection have found you guilty. It only remains to the Court to pronounce the sentence, which the law accords as the punishment for your crime. In the remarks we are about to submit to you, we could not say any thing to wound your feelings. God forbid that we should break the bruised reed. We cannot forget that we are now pronouncing judgment against a fellow man.—We cannot forget that it is but a few years since, and whose prospects were fairer, and whose situation more desirable, than yours;—your wife a fruitful vine, giving joy and comfort to all beneath your roof—your children growing up around you, bidding fair to be the solace of your life and the crown of your old age—youself, surrounded with an ample competency, happy at home and respected abroad. Whence then the sad and appalling reverse, that now presents itself before us? Are we not authorized to say from the evidence, we have heard you are the victim of intemperance. Seduced, deluded, maddened, by the intoxicating draught, you have descended from one degree of moral debasement to another, till at length you find yourself at the bar of your country about to receive sentence of death for the murder of your own child. You have lived out little more than half your days; and yet your race is run; your days are numbered.—May we not apply to you the language of Jehovah to his ancient people: "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself." Already separated and about to be cut off from among the living, a few days only are allowed you to prepare for passing from this tribunal to one of a far different character—to the dread tribunal of the God of the whole earth and sovereign Judge of the world. Surely you will not hesitate forthwith to commence the work of preparation. Be idle no longer, we entreat you. The day is far spent—the night is at hand—the eleventh hour is come—a voice proclaims, Behold! the bridegroom cometh. Fly, fly to God your Saviour, ere it be too late; tarry not, look not back, as you value your immortal soul. Go sinful and heavy laden, as you are. Trust not, that however he may have lived, it shall be well with the wicked hereafter. It is all a delusion. Hail Jehovah said, and will he not do it? "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Go then with all your crimes and sins upon you, and with deep humiliation and sorrow, in fervent, earnest, importunate prayer pour forth your supplications before the throne of mercy.—Wrestle, strive even unto agony; for, seeking only, you will fail to obtain.—Give yourself no rest, until you have made your peace with God. What though your sins are as scarlet, and your hands red with the blood of your poor, helpless, unoffending child; your Heavenly Father will not disregard your strong crying, your struggles, and tears, as you did the convulsive dying struggles of your little son. In this your distress, that Saviour, so often rejected by you, stands at the door knocking, asking to be admitted, and offering himself as your mediator, and redeemer, and advocate with the Father. God, unwilling that any of his rational offspring should perish, waits long to be gracious; and those, who come to him, he will in nowise cast out; nay, while the returning sinner is yet a great way off, he will have compassion on him. Reject not then the offered salvation. Return, we once more entreat you, that God may have mercy on you. Return; and the sound of joy among the angelic hosts will be swelled by the voice of your own infant son. But you have attempted to lay violent hands on your own life. Oh! rush not uncalled, with all your sins upon you, into the presence of your Maker. Seal not your condemnation by another murder. Wait patiently and submissively the dread sentence of the law. You have introduced by your life and example confusion, and disorder, and crime, into God's moral kingdom. Be resigned to the fate, that awaits you; and by submitting to an ignominious death, show to the world the consequences, which flow from crimes like yours. This is all the reparation you can make to society for the many injuries, you have inflicted upon it.

You already anticipate what remains to be done. It is the last painful duty.

The Court having considered the offence whereof you have been duly convicted, do order that you suffer the punishment of death: that in execution of this sentence you be taken to the prison, whence you were brought, and thence to the common gallows in Casine, within the County of Hancock, and that there you be hanged by the neck, until you are dead.

And may God Almighty have mercy on your soul.
