

insure to the Greeks guarantees now necessary; to the Turks useful and positive advantages in place of a sovereignty liable to disaffection and resistance:—

It is calculated that, in accordance with examples drawn from usages of Turkey herself, three principalities may be established in the continent of Greece. The first to be composed to Thessaly, Bœtia and Attica, or Eastern Greece. The second of the ancient Venetian border on the Adriatic, that portion excepted which belongs to Austria; of Epirus and Arcanania, or Western Greece. The third, of the Morea, to which might be added Candia, or southern Greece. The Isles to be subjected to municipal regulations, and governed nearly as they have been heretofore.

In 1465, the Turks, having conquered Wallachia, established therein Princes acknowledging the Divan, as their head, with the privilege, however, of not receiving Ottoman troops. In 1535, Soliman I. after conquering Moldavia, granted it the same privileges. Latterly, these privileges were modified, extended and placed under the safe-guard of Russia. In 1774 Mustapha III. wished to erect the Morea into a Principality; unfortunately he died the same year, and the design was abandoned. It will be objected, perhaps, that the Porte has always been decidedly averse to foreign intervention in the course of the last negotiations. The annals of anterior times, however furnish examples of foreign intervention admitted by the Divan. In 1774, at the peace of Kinnardgi; in 1779 and 1802 also, the intervention of Russia and Prussia was allowed.

It is the belief of Russia, that the Greeks cannot reasonably carry their hopes any farther. They would enjoy a perfect unrestrained freedom of trade, and have their own flag. The Greek Patriarch, who should continue to reside at Constantinople, would be, in a manner, a representative of the Grecian Nation. The Turks should still garrison some fortresses, with a line drawn, however, beyond which they might not pass.—There would be, besides, neither Pacha, nor Gov. but each of the Principalities would pay tribute proportioned to its wealth and extent.—The regulations relative to the internal organization would form the object of a second negotiation between the contracting powers. The Porte would find a certain advantage in a negotiation. A fourth campaign will, in all probability, be as little favourable to Turkey as the preceding; while the proposed arrangement will insure to her peace and tranquility, and regular revenues from the tribute of the several Principalities.—Her repose has been ever disturbed by revolts among the Pachas, who besides appropriated to their own use the treasure they wrested from the people. Of these revolts and insurrections of ambitious or rapacious Pachas, the adoption of this measure would relieve her. Mahomet II. allowing the isles to be simply tributary. This same mode of accommodation, induced between the Porte and Greece, would give the Allied Powers the advantage of securing the enfranchisement of Greece, without deviating from the principles that form the basis of their policy, and without apparently wishing to favour prospects of absolute independence.

Russia, therefore, proposes, 1st, To approve of the suggestions expressed in this memorial; 2d, To agree that analogous instructions be addressed to the Ambassadors and allied Ministers at Constantinople; 3d, To leave to those ministers all necessary latitude; 4th, To agree that all the parts of this plan for pacification, proposed by the alliance, be communicated by them successively; 5th, To inform the ministers that in persuading the Porte to adopt the principle of an intervention or mediation, they will conform to the views of the Allies; and 6th, That it is necessary to impress upon the Porte, that the erection of three principalities, would diminish the collective strength of Greece, and that as the Porte would have the nomination of the Hospodars, Princess, or other Rulers, it would by that secure the interest of the most important families among the Greeks.

WANTS a situation in a Store or Counting House, a person who can get good recommendation, &c. if required. A note directed to A. B. and left at the Royal Gazette Office, will meet with attention.

FREDERICTON, (N. B.)

TUESDAY, 10th AUGUST, 1824.

Alms-House and Work-House.
COMMISSIONER FOR THE WEEK,
HENRY SMITH, Esquire.

From Woodstock.

About one o'clock on Saturday the 31st July, in a violent thunder storm, a flash of Lightning struck the West end of a House owned and occupied by Tristram Hilman, which tore off the verge boards, then dividing, one part run along the plate, and the other down the chimney, which cut a furrow out of the Stones. Mrs. Hilman was looking out of the window, and on turning toward the fire-place was struck dead on the floor; on examining the body there was a spot discovered on her left temple, where the bone was much indented, another mark down her breast and between her shoulders a streak like the burn of a hot Iron, her cap was torn in pieces, her hair singed, her shoe on her left foot parted at the sole, and shivered in pieces. Such was the very singular death of Catharine Hilman, but it gives her friends pleasure to state that for many years past she possessed genuine piety, and her life was an ornament to her profession.—She was in the 43d year of her age, leaving an affectionate husband, eight children and a numerous acquaintance to lament her loss.
