MUSIC SCHOOL. J. H. HARTT

OFFERS to teach Vocal Music one evening in each week for three months, for £10. The money to be paid in advance, and put immediately into the Savings Bank, as a donation to the first respectable Society, that shall unite Vocal and Instrumental Music.

He is induced to make the above proposition, from a conviction that the organization of a Society, is not calculated to facilitate the acquisition of those Musical principles, which, it is the primary object of a School to teach; and which are no less important, as the basis of an accurate and elegant performance, than, as the prerequisite qualification of members for such Society.

He requires a competent number of respectable persons, whose musical talents are worthy of improvement. The procurement of a suitable room, &c. &c.
