

HALIFAX, June 20.

Presenting Colours to His Majesty's 81st Regt.

Wednesday forenoon a military spectacle of great splendor and interest, was exhibited at the Exercising ground on the Common. The old colours of the 81st Regiment, under which that distinguished corps have fought for these twenty eight years, and which waved over them in the actions of Maida and Corunna,—fields from which they derived so much deserved renown, had become so defaced and worn, that the Officers deemed it necessary to procure a new pair. The ceremony of presenting them, agreeably to public announcement, took place this day; and the anticipation of witnessing this solemn and imposing sight, attracted to the spot a large and fashionable concourse of the inhabitants.

About twelve o'clock the three Regiments now in Barracks—the 81st, 74th, and the Rifle Brigade, were drawn up into a hollow square, one side of which remained open. The area thus formed was occupied by His Excellency Sir James Kempt, and Staff, Ad. Lake, &c. The carriage of His Excellency, at the hour above mentioned, drew up in front of the 81st Regt. containing Mrs. Creagh, the lady of Col. Creagh, who had been requested to present the colours. Immediately afterwards the ceremony commenced by a prayer, and an appropriate address being delivered by the Rev. J. T. Twining, Chaplain to the Forces. At the conclusion of this the banners were placed in the hands of his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, who is Colonel of the Regiment, and who immediately stepped up to the carriage and presented them to Mrs. Creagh, with the following words:

"The Colours of the 81st Regiment will come with peculiar propriety and grace from your hands, and I request you will do me the honor of presenting them."

Ensigns De Rottenburgh and Creagh then stepped forward, and Mrs. Creagh delivered to them and to the Regiment the handsome address which is given beneath.

"In having the flattering honour conferred on me of presenting Colours to a Regiment in which my tenderest affections and most friendly regards are centered, it is difficult for me to give expression to all the feelings which a ceremony so imposing and so deeply interesting to my heart excites.

"I cannot pray for more than that while serving under those new banners, you may display the same ardour and invincible bravery which so brightly shone forth under your old colours at MAIDA, when the 81st. was so gloriously led to victory by its distinguished General.

"May Maida, Corunna, and the other glory-commemorating inscriptions on your Colours be always present to your minds, and with the blessing of the Almighty every lead and preserve the 81st in the path of honor and virtue.

"Into your hands my young friend, I present your King's Colours; and into your charge my beloved son, I give the Colours of your Regiment." [At this part of the address Ensigns De Rottenburgh and Creagh stepped forward, and were each presented with a banner.] When your country requires their defence, I, even as a mother can say, they never should be abandoned but in death;—and may you while fighting under them, and during your whole military lives, endeavour to pursue the splended career of your illustrious General, and may you like him, be distinguished with the well merited rewards of a gracious Sovereign, and the thanks of a grateful country."

The two Ensigns having retired to resume their usual station in front of the Regiment, Col. Creagh spoke in the following manner:—

"Those Colours which by the distinguished favour of His Excellency Sir James Kempt, have just been presented to the 81st in a manner so truly gratifying to my feelings, shall, I can promise, never be sullied by the corps I have the honor and happiness to command; and in the day of battle, I trust they will ever wave as triumphantly as did our old Colours, when the path of victory was pointed out to the 81st by the General under whom we have now the good fortune to be placed."

The Colours were then paraded round His Excellency and the fair donor, attended by the grenadier company and the band playing appropriate music. The different Regiments were then formed into line, and having marched round the Exercising ground, were deployed off to their respective barracks.

We have been informed that

His Excellency has presented to the Regiment a very liberal sum commemorative of the honours of the day.
