We will not attempt to be the apologists for excesses committed under any circumstances, but surely the wretched situation of those unfortunate beings and their families, is enough to drive them to desperation. Is there a man who has a shilling or a guinea to spare, that should not come forward and render those menin some way or other assistance? If those who possess means be not actuated by feelings of humanity, they should be by motives of duty, for it is impossible to say in what way they may be visited by the effects of the "distress of the poor."

The Journal of the Two Worlds has the following article in the number of the 18th July: -"The Mexican Government has forbidden all English ships of the Royal Navy to anchor under the fort of St. Juan d'Ullua, or even to moor there: but they may do both at the Isle of Sacrificios.—It seems that this measure has been suggested by the fear that they may attempt to seize upon it, and make it another Gibraltar. Whether these fears are well founded or not, it is certain that the city of Vera Cruz has asked of the Government that this fort should be demolished, but this request has been rejected.
