"The Genius of Norfolk" on the "British Order in Council" &c. inserted in our preceding columns, appears to have maturely considered the important subject on which he has written with such candour and judgment. We beg to refer our readers to the perusal of the article as highly deserving of their attention. The author evidently writes from great experience, and much personal knowledge; and the honorable manner in which he has discussed the question, entitles him to general approbation.

The account of the seduction and suicide of Miss Hynde which we published last week, is, we understand, from beginning to end, a fabrication.

We have just been favoured with a Pamphlet, lately published in London, on "the Claims and Conduct of the United States, respecting their North Eastern Boundary, and the value of the British Colonies in North America." We have only had time to take a cursory glance at its contents; sufficient however to assure us of the sterling nature of the work, and to which we shall commence giving publicity in our next. As we are aware that a subject so interesting as this is, as well as of so recent occurrence, cannot but be perused with avidity by all persons, whether in 'North America' or elsewhere; and as the strong hand of this writer has penned his consummate knowledge with a high degree of perspicuity and vigour, we shall continue its insertion in each succeeding Paper till the publication be completed.

On Sunday Evening last, at 6 o'clock, (exclusive of the usual service,) a Lecture on the Advent of our Blessed Redeemer, was delivered by Archdeacon Best, in which he enforced the propriety of a religious observance of this and other seasons preparatory to the great Feasts and Festivals-observed by the Established Church; and we understand it is his intention to continue the subject every succeeding Sunday evening until Christmas day.

MISSING.—JOHN LLOYD, (aged 34) Lance Sergeant of the 81st Regiment, went upon the River Saint John, on the evening of the 29th ult. for the purpose of fishing; but as he has not yet returned, it is supposed the Ice must have given way with him. He was seen by some of the Inhabitants, on the evening of his departure, coming down the River nearly opposite the barracks, with a string of Fish in his hand. He had been about 16 years in the Regiment, and has left a wife and three children.

To the Editor of the N. B. Royal Gazette.

SIR,—Observing in your Paper of Tuesday last, an enquiry after the "derivation" and "meaning" of "a well known Headland in the Bay of Fundy called Point Le Proue,"—if the following should happen to be the best reply you may have received, you are at liberty to insert it for the information of your Correspondents.

Pointe la Proue, (not Le Proue) is the french for a low cape or promontory, resembling the prow of a Ship—or it might be so construed. It should now be ascertained, (and a Sailor would, I think, be the best judge in such a matter,) what is the figure of this Headland from the water; and whether it is any thing like a ship's prow?—(In the map it does resemble it when looked at in a certain direction, but this I only notice as a coincidence, because places of a particular nature like the present, are most commonly named from their natural aspect.) And if in sailing up or down the Bay of Fundy, Pointe la Proue does indeed resemble the appearance which the term implies, I presume it is not unlikely that some of the original settlers, who are said to have been french, did hit upon the name from this circumstance.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
E.

From the Frontiers of Russia, Aug 10.—We have received from good authority, news respecting the conferences at Akerman, the conclusion of which Russia has required, within a fixed time; and this news is such as cannot fail to give pleasure to the friends of peace, and to make Europe easy respecting the ambitious views of Russia.

(From the Constitutionnel, Oct. 3.)

Nuremberg, Sept 25.—A good deal is said here at present about a memoir drawn up by an ex-Diplomatist, in which he states the basis of a plan or accommodating the differences between European powers on the affairs of Turkey. He proceeds on the principle that the East must receive a new organization in order to adapt itself to the wants and interests of the great European powers. He first of all proposes the independence of Greece, which is to have a Constitution drawn up under the auspices of the cabinets of Europe, and which shall take rank among independent States either as a federation, republic, or a monarchy. The emancipation of Egypt would also be necessary to complete the general system. Russia ought to get possession of Moldavia, and Austria of Walachia. By this means there would be no fear of the aggrandisement of Russia on the side of Turkey, since Austria, by gaining possession of Walachia, would have it in her power to check any such attempt. Candia and Cyprus ought to be separated from Turkey—the one to be given to France, and the other to England; unless they should prefer to give these islands up to the Knights of Malta, who, to perform their political part in the general system, ought to be re-established on a territory much larger than that of Rhodes, or any one island in the Mediterranean.
