HIS MAJESTY'S LEVEE.

On Thursday, March 27, His Majesty held the first Levee for this season, which excited considerable interest among the Nobility and Gentry, many of whom travelled a considerable distance, in order to be present at it. The fineness of the weather attracted considerable numbers about the Palace at an early hour. The Marshalsmen, the Under Porters, the Gentlemen Porters, the Sergeant Porters, the Pages, &c., attended at the Palace in their respective uniforms. The King's Guard, with their state colours, with the Band of the third regiment of Foot Guards in full uniforms, marched into the Palace Court-yard at one o'clock; about the same time a Captain's Guard of the Life Guards, preceded by their magnificent Band, took up their station in the open space in front of the Palace at the south end of St. James's-street; the two Bands performed alternately during the afternoon. So early as 12 o'clock, several carriages had arrived at the Palace; the gates were not thrown open till one o'clock, and the company immediately began setting down, and continued so to do till past three, without any intermission. MARCH 26.

HORRID DEPRAVITY.

LANCASTER.—Jane Scott, who was acquitted of the murder of her father, at the last assizes, was convicted at the present, for the murder of her mother. The horrid crimes of this woman are beyond all example. At an interview with her sister, after her condemnation, she confessed the murder of that sisters child, a little girl about eighteen months old, two years ago, to whom she gave laudanum, in revenge of a quarrel with her mother. The child was thought to have died in a fit. She also confessed that shortly afterwards she poisoned her own illegitimate child, a fine boy about four years old, whom she gave arsenic at tea time, by mixing it in some treacle: she took her seat opposite him, and watched him; she said, that almost directly after, she saw the glass come over his eyes, and he died shortly. At the time, many thought the child had not died properly, but she was never taken up about it. She was brought up in a Sunday-school, and from the age of fourteen years, has led a very abandoned life. At the age of fifteen she was seduced. She confessed she had ministered the arsenic to her parents in order to get their property, having been instigated to get rid of them by two dissolute male companions. She had never got out of bed since her condemnation, and had refused eating since Wednesday. She had frequent dreams, and called aloud, 'Oh, my dear father and mother! oh my dear Tommy!' (meaning her child) Oh! do forgive me! save me! save me! She was executed, pursuant to her sentence, on Saturday morning. She had never once got up from the time of her sentence until the morning of her execution, when she took a little tea: she was in a state almost of madness, and during the night, as on the former night, was crying out aloud. Early in the morning, she was in such a state of exhaustion, that, at one period, it was thought that she would have expired; but she afterwards recovered, and became a little more composed. The Rev. Mr. Rowley, the chaplain, attended her a considerable time previous to the hour of execution. When brought out, she was obliged to be carried by two women; life was all but gone; she had not the least use of her limbs, her eyes were closed, she only once opened them. The whole time, from her coming out until she ceased to exist, did not exceed two minutes.

Curious Case in Medical Jurisprudence.—A gentleman married and in embarrassed circumstances, suddenly disappearing, it was concluded that he had gone off to avoid his creditors, on which they met, declared him a bankrupt, ascertained the amount of his property, and declared a dividend. Among this property was a jointure of 200l. a year to his wife, which they could legally claim, if he was a bankrupt; but if not, it continued the property of the widow. Five weeks and four days from the morning of his disappearance, his body was found floating in a neighbouring river, and so putrid that it was identified chiefly by the dress, and the contents of the pockets. And here arose a question, was he dead at the time he was declared a bankrupt; and if so, can a dead man be declared a bankrupt. One of his relatives, a veterinary surgeon, discovered, on carefully examining the body, that part of the flesh on the loins had been converted into adipocire, this he cut, carried it off, and showed it to Dr. Gibbes, who was at that time superintending the Institution for the production of adipocire, and the result of whose extensive experience was, that it was never formed in less than six or eight weeks. This evidence was produced on the trial, and was conclusive, and it was clear that the drowned man must have been under water since the morning of his disappearance, and, consequently, that he was dead at the time when he was declared a bankrupt. In law, a dead man cannot be made a bankrupt; the bankruptcy was set aside, and the jointure of 200l. a year restored to the widow.—Medical Gazette.

Melancholy Suicide.—On Friday morning last General Viscount de Saldos, a Spaniard of high rank, and one of those victims of Ferdinand who have sought a asylum in this country, terminated his existence at the House of a Mr. Perrow, of No. 19, Berner-street, Commercial-road, where he had been for some time past residing. The evils attendant on exile—obscurity, deprivation of rank, and pecuniary difficulties—are supposed to have led to, if not induced, this calamitous catastrophe, combined with another circumstance which no doubt is fresh in the mind of the reader. The apprehension of his son Baltasar, on a charge of forgery on Jones, Loyd, and Co., bankers, preyed on the sensitively honourable mind of the deceased, and created feelings which the pride of an old Castilian could but ill endure. Not having come down as usual on the morning before mentioned, suspicion was excited that some calamity had taken place, and on going to his room to ascertain the cause of absence, the worst fears were realized, and
