ΓΗΕ ROYAL GAZETTE.

Were

which

ment,

minis-

those

e eve-

s and

native

esort-

under

that

s and

fty, in

e civil

rench

nd the

ovided

iminal

e, Ca-

f civil

ration, 7

coun-

n had

grants

by the

ranted

nner;

ler the

lexist-

Eng-

r Aet

anada,

n im-

d been

mment

oment,

other

is fur-

duties

ne bet-

rnment

uld be

boong

egisla-

tion of

before

which

vas the

ned re-

mitigaation of

of their

which,

colony

pon it,

1, as re-

alluded

hat all

olies of

the ex-

es. In

not ap-

sembly.

itt to m-

ec Act,

e period,

. That

governcolonies,

By this

g the re-

was resubject

o divide

as com

loyalist country

merica were in rovinces

system to form

tion the

to enjo

e Hous

the right

erests n

in aut

district

suprem ved, not

thise amongst the several districts of Lower Cana- conveniences and evils arising out of the existing thorities there? Had any thing been expended extrada, in the year 1792, nearly in the following pro- system there, he was satisfied he would quite weary vagantly, or beyond what was absolutely necessary ? da, in the year the boyond what was absolutely necessary is not be allotted the out the patience of the house. On the law of mort- Had not every useful object been suspended there? portion in the law of members each ; to three gages a complete alteration was necessary; the re- He could not call the present a state of anarchy, others, one member each ; to two cities, four mem-gistration of deeds had uniformly been resisted; the but he would not hesitate to say it was a state exbers; to one of the towns, two; and to one more, introduction and employment of English capital was tremely to be deplored. He would abstain from but a single representative. It was certainly a mis- considered a grievance, and there was no system of going further into the question than was absolutely fortune that the gallant officer had adopted a mode law in force for keeping open a free communication by necessary to show the house that it has a right to inof distribution, so fallacious in its results to Lower roads from one part of the country to another. On terfere, and endeavour to establish a system which Canada, where those districts and seigniorities, this head, so absurd and absolute was the old law might give a fair share of benefits to be derived from having the advantage of being placed on the two of France, that the Legislature, with all the aid a free form of government to the whole provincial banks of the River St. Lawrence, were of course of the executive government, had not, for the last population; granting, at the same time, an authothe more populous at that period, and hence were 15 years, created a single new road, nor attempted rity to the Executive Government to improve the considered entitled to have two representatives; to connect any distant district with the great River condition and resources of the Province, to form whilst the other districts, not being French seign- St. Lawrence, content with those afforded through and assimilate a fund, similar to that which was iories, being remote from the advantages of com- the medium of some tributary streams. The advan- called in this country the civil list. It was not fit merce, through their great distance from the River tages to be derived from establishments for the that the English Ministers, and the Judges of the St. Lawrence, and consequently but thinly peo- purpose of generally diffusing education through- land should, as on the principle of their old French pled by English settlers exclusively, were apportioned out the younger branches of society had been total- system of Government, be suffered to be dependent on the lesser number of representatives, and each dis-ly neglected and overlooked, and they appeared, in a popular vota, and the arts by which it is too oftrict was considered entitled only to one represen- most instances, less desirous of cultivating their ten obtained. (Loud cheers.) Besides, this would tative. It was a great mistake to take the existing mutual connexion with each other, than improving be to throw them on a fluctuating fund for support population of that day, in these districts, as a per- their intercourse with the neighbouring districts of and remuneration. He would only ask the House manent rule or criterion to determine in what pro- the United States, from whence it appeared they to establish, for the use of those Provinces, a civil portion they were entitled to representatives. The felt their wants were more likely to be relieved. In list for a definite period, providing that after that list effect of taking this as a criterion never to be the year 1822 attempts were made to improve the was paid off yearly, the remainder of the money in changed, was, that it threw the whole weight of the condition of the colonists by, amongst other regula- the hands of the executive should be left to the conrepresentation into the French segniories, and into tions, an incorporation of the French seignories with trol of the colonial Legislature. So little anxious the seignories alone. Thus, in that part of a coun- other districts, which, however, was resisted and was the Colonial Government to have any balance try which consisted of seignories in part, and part- failed. Whether this was the best mode of remedy- in its hand, that it had expressed itself desirous to ly of villages, the English settlers who were almost ing the evils in the system, he should not stop now submit the very last shilling of their revenue to the always to be found in the latter, which had not the to inquire. It was also proposed subsequently that investigation and examination of the representative advantage of roads to communicate with distant it would be a step towards this reform, so desirable Assembly, and submit to the arrangement which heplaces, or were not situate on either of the banks of to the interest of the colony, that the whole of those now had the honor to propose. [Hear.] He should the River St. Lawrence, had hardly any share in districts in Lower Canada which were now separate refrain from entering into many other topics he the representation. Any one of the Counties, he from, and prejudiced by, the exclusive advantages might have introduced, because he thought he had believed, would exceed in dimensions the whole of of the seignories, should be incorporated into a third said enough already to induce the house to agree the seigniories, and perhaps not long hence, would Province, an organized representation. To this, with him that they ought to refer the present state exceed them also in population. Had the division however, there existed, in different quarters, very of the Civil Government of Canada, under the Act of the counties been into sections, taking care that strong objections. One important consideration for of 1791, to a Committee. He hoped he should not none of these sections should be entitled to send the house was, what should be the controlling pow- hear it said, as some he believed out of doors have more than two members to the House of Assembly, er which the Government there ought to exercise done, that they might spare themselves the troublethen the inconvenience now complained of would not over the Legislature; another was, the fiscal con- of entering into this subject, by relinquishing up to have been felt, and the English settlers would fairly trol over its annual revenue. In the year 1774, the colony itself all controul and dominion over those have participated in the representation of these pro- the French laws there had been abrogated, and its provinces. [Hear.] He knew such were not the vinces. From this participation they were not ex- own revenue had been allotted to its own use. The sentiments of the Colonists themselves. They were cluded, and the French seigniories alone possessed permanent revenue of Canada was about 32,0001. from feeling attached to this county; and the many that influence, derivable from so important an advantage. a year, which had of right been subject to, or splendid proofs they had given of their heroic con-In consequence of adopting this objectionable rule of partition apropriated by, the Lords Commissioners of the duct on trying occasions, and their fidelity to the in respect to the representation of Lower Canada, there had Treasury. The hereditary revenue of the Crown interests of this empire, challenged our best wishes been no addition, notwithstanding its increase in population, to the number of representatives; whilst in Upper Canada, where a sounder principle had been adopted in the distribution of the representation, there had been an increase in plied to the local wants of the Colony ; the deficit, [Cheers.] He would not dilate on the importance the Representative body from 15 to 50 in number. Although or remainder, was raised there by the Legislature of the connexion, in a naval, political and commerciit was true that every freeholder was entitled to vote, that itself, and was in great part applied to the improve- al point of view, but he must remind the House, privilege or benefit was still confined to the French seignment of the navigation of the River St. Lawrence. that the political honor, the good faith of this couniories. He stated this with more confidence, because that all persons connected with Canada, and all parties interested The whole formed a sum of 140,000l. applicable to try, was pledged to the protection and support of the in the welfare of this colony, admit that some change in this general purposes. Ever since the year 1774, no- Canadian Provinces, and warn them of the moral respect, was absolutely necessary even for the welfare of thing could go on more smoothly than the money effects which would be produced throughout Europe this province. It had hitherto been the object of the Canadian affairs of the colony. The Assembly of Lower Ca- and the world, by our voluntary relinquishment, if Legislature, and the circumstance was naturally euough acnada came to a resolution, to apportion the perman- it might not rather be called abandonment, of our counted for, to endeavour to adopt exclusive principles and ent revenue of the colony item by item. On the dominion over that quarter of the globe. [Loud restrictions, with respect to every thing English, whether English settlers, English industry, or English Laws. In fact, other hand it was maintained, that the Crown alone cheers.] No country more loudly, more justly, deit was impossible to obtain justice but in the seigniories, or to had a right to appropriate this branch of revenue to manded our support, our protection, than Canada. enforce payment, to sue or to be sued, or to compel an ac- the maintenance of the administration of justice, and Her value to us was not, like that of Louisiana to count, except according to the form of proceeding adopted the civil government of the colony, he believed there France, to be estimated by pounds, shillings and in that province, denominated the custom of Paris. This was no lawyer then present who would be disposed pence, nor ought it basely to be sold or bartered for was a system of law or constitution, growing out of the French customs of a very distant date, which were inimical to deny that the Crown had a right so to do. [Hear.] money. We could not part with our dominions The Crown, having control of the public purse had there without doing an injustice to their fidelity and to trade. They were not that system of laws known in refused to acquiesce in this appropriation except tried attachment, and tarnishing forever our nation-France at the time of Louis XVI, or even shortly it were made under the distribution of the Crown. al honor. We were not at liberty to forego the high prior to the Rovolution, but antecedent even to the This was the cause of the whole dispute existing and important duties imposed on us by our relative year 1760; that is, it was a system of law arising between the executive Government and the re-isituation towards these colonies. It was a country out of the decrees or regulations of the Parliament presentative Assembly. Both parties might be where no distinctions prevailed, such as disturbed of Paris, without such regulations being at all sub-fairly considered as standing on their extreme some of our other territorial possessions abroad, ject to any revision or control by courts of an equit- rights. Its immediate effect was to impose on the there was no distinction of castes or of slavery. able jurisdiction. Then it was only in this wilder- executive a necessity to direct warrants to be issu- which tended to engender dissention or disaffection. ness in another hemisphere that it was possible now ed, which in strictness were not authorised by acts We had every were displayed marks of a paternal. to trace the remnant of the French feudatory sys- of the Legislature. This was a circumstance government, and planted improvements on not only tem in the present day. And the evils of that sys- which, under a free form of government, could not on our colonies there, but wherever our empire has tem was aggravated by its being unaccompanied by be witnessed without being deplored. In an Eng- extended ; we had carried thither our language, the establishment of any superior court or correc- lish House of Commons it was to be regretted that and our laws, and our free institutions, and they tional jurisdiction, which might improve or render any part of the revenue had been even by necessi- could not fail, in the fullness of time, to be free less oppressive its injurious influence on the inter- ty so appropriated. But such was the consequence countries like our own. If it were said this was ests of the colonists. Thus these circumstances of this unhappy difference; and it appeared now, true, but it was a great sacrifice; he would reply were all unpropitious to the interests of the English that the persons holding the opinion he had stated, that despite of that sacrifice, England still stood presettler in particular, who felt himself as much ex- calculated on accomplishing their object through eminent in power and happiness above all other nacluded from the body of the French settlers occupy- the medium of the distress it would entail on that tions. Were there not bonds between natioas as ing both banks of the St. Lawrence, as a colony of country, and wearying out those who were officially well as between individuals; or was it fair to object Englishmen seated in the centre of France would answerable to the English Government. And was to us that whilst imparting to other countries these have found itself so far back as the 13th century. it right that these parties should be suffered by that blessings he had feebly attempted to describe, we It was not singular, therefore, that no proportionate house thus to weary the executive until they have had only been prompted by a desire to rid ourselves improvement had taken place under these circum- obtained their ends? But he would now ask what of a surplus population? Whether we were to constances in Lower Canada, as compared with Upper had been the consequences of this compulsa-tinue in close connexion, and in the hands of com-Canada. Were he to attempt to enumerate the in- tory departure from the practice of the colonial au- mon international union; or whether, in the course of