THE FORCE OF HABIT.

A PALE. Habits are stobborn things-And, by the time a man's turn'd of forty, His " ru'ing passion's" grown so haughty, There is no clipping of as wings. The trath will best be shown, By a familiar instance of our own.

----Dick Stripe Was a dear friend and lover of the pipe; He often us d to say. "One pipe of Wishart's best,

Gave I fe a zesi ; To him 'twas meat and drink, and physic, To see the friendly vapour Curl round his midnight taper, And the black fame,

Clothe all the room In clouds as dark as science metaphysic !" So still he smoak'd, and drank,

And crack'd his joke-And had he single tarried, He might have smok'd And still grown old in smoke, But-Richard, married His wife was one who carried The female virtues almost to a vice, She was so very nice;

For, thrice a week, above, below, The house was seour'd from top to toe; And all the floors were rubb'd so bright,

You dare not walk upright, For fear of slid ng-But that, she took a pride in. Of all things else, Rebecca Stripe Could least endure a pipe, She rail'd upon the filthy herb, Tobacco; Protested that the noisome vapour

Had spoilt the best chintz curtains, and the paper, And cost her many pounds in stucco: And then she quoted our King James, who saith, "Tobacco has the devil's breath." When wives will govern, husbands must obey;

For many-a-day Dick mourn'd and miss'd his favourite tobacco, And curs'd-Rebecca.

At length the time did come, his wife must die; Imagine now the doleful cry Of female friends, old nunts, and cousins, Who, to her fin'rel flock'd by dozens: The Undertaker, men, and mutes Stood at the gues in sall rsuits With mouraf I loo's,

Just like so many molan balv mola!-Now cakes, and ale, and wine are handed round Folks sigh and drink -and drink and sigh, For grief makes people dy !---But, Dick is missing, no where to be found;

Above, below, about, They search'dethe bouse throughout, Euch hole, and secret entry, Quite from the garret to the pantry, In every corner, cupbourd, noult, and shelf, And all concludded, he had hang'd himself! At length they found him; guess you where ;

'Twill make you stare; Close by Rebecca's coffin !! at his rest, Smoking a pipe of Wisthart's best.
