RULES OF COMPETITION.

- I. The decision of the Judges appointed to award the Prizes, to be final.
 - II. The owner of any Animal for which a premium shall be claimed, must give information in writing to the Secretary, what breed the Animal is of, and where-bred.
 - III. To entitle any claimant to the premium for the best, or the second best fat Ox, it is further required, that he not only exhibit a statement of the mode of fattening, but prove that the Animal has been kept within this Province for at least twelve months prior to the day of exhibition.
 - IV. Claimants for premiums for the best, and second best working Oxen, must prove that each pair has been worked together at least six months before the day of exhibition.
 - V. The quantity and quality of the Butter, for which premiums must be claimed, and the number of Cows from which the same shall have been made, together with the mode of feeding the Cows, to be proved by the Affidavit of the Claimant, confirmed by two respectable neighbours.
 - VI. Persons claiming premiums upon imported Animals, shall engage to keep the same within the Province.
 - VII. No Animal for which one premium shall have been awarded to any owner, shall be considered a subject for any further premium of the Society, except it be for qualities different from those for which the first premium was awarded.
- No premiums will be awarded to any person who shall not be a Member of the Central Society, or of some one of the County Agricultural Societies, in this Province.

Any attempts to obtain premiums by unfair practices, will be punished by a forfeiture of the premium, should it be awarded before a discovery, and will also preclude the offender from competing for premiums in future. Premiums not demanded within six months after they are awarded, shall be considered as having been generously given in aid of the funds of the Society.

RICHARD SIMONDS, SECRETARY.

A DUPE TO VILLAINY.

Perhaps there never was a greater dupe to villains in this country than the unfortunate Meredith, who died a few days ago in the King's Bench Prison. The following extraordinary case is one of the numerous instances in which his vanity and credulity were worked upon with success:— Seven years ago he rented a furnished House in Park-street, where he was surrounded by the most dashing swindlers in England. One of the fraternity, a Captain in the Army, wormed himself into the confidence of Meredith, whose house was immediately opposite to that of a noble Lord who had two or three beautiful daughters. Meredith fancied himself beloved by one of those young ladies, and his friend encouraged the fancy for his own purposes, and told Meredith that if he managed the thing well, he might get the girl. The thing to be done was to procure an interview, and Meredith's friend recommended an immediate correspondence. A love-letter was written to the lady by the lover, and the Captain's servant, who was to be well paid, was employed to deliver it. This trusty messenger delivered the letter to his master, who wrote an answer in the lady's name, stating her regret that she could not see her dear Meredith, as she was obliged to go off to Ireland, in consequence of his Majesty's determination to visit that country, where she hoped to see her beloved. Meredith, delighted at this avowal, proposed an immediate journey, and requested the Captain's company. The latter replied, that the thing required great caution and tact, and that as he owed £300 or £400 in Ireland, he could not face that country without that sum. This difficulty was soon removed. The Captain got the required amount from his dupe, and off to Dublin they went, where the correspondence was resumed, the answers of the young Lady becoming so warm that Meredith wrote to her to run off with him at once.—“Yes,” said she, in her reply, “I will run away with you, but, unfortunately, my family have become acquainted with my passion for you, and are resolved to take me off to the seat of a Nobleman, about 60 miles from town. I shall, however, write to you, and let you know how to proceed.” The letter concluded with strong approbation of the address and talent of the servant in managing the correspondence. This was a severe check to Meredith's hopes, but the Captain cheered him up, and told him that his servant's assistance would release a girl from the protection of the Devil himself. Another letter was sent, and another received. The lady described her situation as wretched in the extreme, and vowed that she could only be happy with her lover, but she could not move without bribing the servants, for which purpose she required a couple of hundred pounds. The money was supplied, and the time of starting was appointed. Meredith was to be ready with his carriage at a spot adjoining the estate on which she was on a visit. He was punctual. After having waited for some time in great suspense, he perceived a lady, elegantly attired, running hastily towards him. “Oh! dear Meredith,” she exclaimed, “I am pursued—the servants are after me—save me, save me!”—“With my life,” cried Meredith, and he lifted her into the carriage. “Halloo!” said two or three savage-looking fellows, who just sprang out of a ditch; with cudgels in their hands, “Where are you galloping with our young mistress?” and, without more words, they laid their sticks so heavily upon the poor inamorato's shoulders, that he yielded up his prize without any further effort, and drove off in a state of mind and body not easily to be described. But, although Meredith's ardour sustained some abatement, that of the young lady was as ardent as ever. She wrote to him, deploring the mishap, and told him that her
