

been secured for sea, in consequence of which they took more time in being cleared away, and I was half way to shore before I heard the running crackling of the rackets and the boat splash into the water. The noise seemed so near to me that I looked round, but saw nothing: soon, however, I heard the rolling of the oars in the hulls, and my hopes began to fail me, when a sight of the fretting surf on the rocks cheered and saved me from sinking with despair. I plied every nerve, and in a few minutes more was close to the breakers. None but swimmers can conceive the narrow limits of the view when the head only is above the surface; every wave is a boundary; and to a person pursued as I was, and in search of a landing-place, mountains could not have been a more agonising barrier. I at last perceived a black shelving point of rock, on which the surf was rolling heavily on one side, while on the other the water appeared smoother. For this point I immediately swam, as a forlorn hope. On approaching, I found myself between two white ridges of foaming water, and occasionally sunk in the hollow abyss of the waves, and sometimes dashed about amidst the foam on their tops. When about to pass the shelving rock, I was thrown head foremost into its margin by one of those sovereign waves which lord it over all the rest, and left in a kind of niche, which prevented its recoil sweeping me back. On recovering from the stun I received, I found that my head was cut and bleeding, but that the wound on my heel was of no consequence. Soon the noise of oars and voices assailed my ears, and I distinctly heard the midshipman of the boat say, "The fellow never could land here: he must have been dashed to pieces on the rocks, or drowned in the surf, and we shall find his body in the morning." This convinced me I was not deceived.
