

The law now takes its full force here against rum-selling. Twice have fines been imposed since the Spring. A trial came off this week, when they both confessed to having violated the License Law, and pleaded guilty in extenuation of their crime. The Justices who gave judgment are both professedly temperance men; but, notwithstanding, the sentence of one was only Three Pounds whilst the other had to pay Five Pounds. If two individuals were to conduct an illicit trade, which, perhaps, would injure no one in particular but themselves, and had they been prosecuted as often, there can be no doubt but the sentence would have been to the full extent provided for by the law, whilst for selling contrary to law, that which produces its blighting effects everywhere, the fines are lighter than formerly. It would pay the county well to hire those two respective sellers to sell no more.

The long hand of the clock is now directly over and in a line with the short one, I must therefore bid you good night.

FRANCE.

THE FUNERAL CAR OF NAPOLEON I., presented to Napoleon III. by Queen Victoria, arrived at Paris on Friday morning, in the custody of Sir John Burgoyne. The minister at War had sent one of his aides-de-camp to Havre to meet Sir John. The ceremony of the reception of this relic at the Invalids took place at one o'clock in the afternoon. The Prince Napoleon, the Minister at War, and General Count d'Ornana, the governor of the Invalids, were present. The pensioners were drawn up in two lines, extending from the outer gate to the chapel doors. The car was placed temporarily in the peristyle of the chapel, but it is ultimately to have a place near the Emperor's tomb in the Chapelle St. Jerome. Sir John Burgoyne made a brief speech. He said:—

"Her Majesty the Queen of England, being desirous of offering to his Imperial Majesty a relic which she knows to be interesting to France has charged me to bring to Paris, and to place at the disposal of the Emperor, the funeral car on which were conveyed to his first tomb the mortal remains of the illustrious founder of the Napoleonic dynasty. The admiration which I feel, as a soldier, for the sublime genius and exploits of that great warrior has caused me to feel the greater pleasure at the choice which my gracious Sovereign has made of me for the fulfilment of this honourable mission."

Prince Napoleon replied:—

"General,—I receive, in the name of the Emperor, the precious relic which the Queen of England has sent to him. I receive it as a testimony of her desire to efface the poignant remembrances of St. Helena, as a pledge of the friendship which unites the two sovereigns, and as a proof of the alliance which exists between the two nations. May this alliance long continue, for the happiness of the human race! May it reserve for the future as great results as those which it has already produced? I am charged by the Emperor to inform you, General, that he particularly appreciates the choice which the Queen has made of you for this mission. We are happy to have to thank one of those glorious chiefs of the English army by the side of whom we have fought, and for whom we have retained such a high esteem."

The Mouiteur publishes the following letter, which the Emperor has addressed to his cousin, Prince Napoleon, Minister of Algeria and of the Colonies:—

"St. Cloud, October 30.
"My Dear Cousin,—I have the liveliest desire that at the moment when the difference with Portugal relative to the Charles et Georges has terminated, the question of engagement of free labourers on the African coast should be definitively examined and finally settled on the truest principles of humanity and justice.

"I energetically claimed from Portugal the restitution of the Charles et Georges, because I will always maintain intact the independence of the national flag; and, in this case it was only with the profound conviction of my right that I risked, with the King of Portugal, a rupture of those friendly relations which I am glad to maintain with him.

"But as to the principle of the engagement of the Negroes, my ideas are far from being settled. If in truth, labourers recruited on the African coast are not allowed the exercise of their free will, and if this enrolment is only the slave trade in disguise, I will have it on no terms; for it is not I who will anywhere protect enterprises contrary to progress, to humanity, and to civilization.

"I beg you, then, to seek out the truth with the zeal and intelligence which you bring to bear on all affairs which you take in hand; and as the best method of putting an end to what is a continual cause of dispute would be to substitute the free labour of Indian Coolies for that of the Negroes, I beg you to come to an understanding with the Minister for Foreign Affairs to resume with the English Government the negotiations which were entered upon a few months ago.

"Whereon, my dear cousin, I pray God to have you in his holy keeping."
"NAPOLEON."

TURNING THE TABLES.—A corn-factor was returning two days ago, from Montlery, on the Orleans road, when suddenly a man holding a large stick in his hand, stepped out from behind a tree, and demanded his money or his life. "Why, you seem very peremptory," was the reply, "but here is my answer," and he drew out a revolver. Then presenting the weapon at the man, he said, "If you do not obey my injunctions in every respect, I will fire. It is an unpleasant thing to kill a man, but with respect to you, I should not have the slightest hesitation. First of all, throw down your stick; and next, turn out your pockets, and place there on the road everything of value you have about you—money, jewels, no matter what." "I cannot resist a demand so strongly supported," said the other, "but if you do business on the highway also, I must say that it is very irregular to rob a comfrere." "Come, make haste," said the other, in a menacing tone; "it is a punishment I inflict on you; I want to give your money to the poor. Despatch!" The footpad made no further delay, but laid his stick and portemonnaie at the foot of the factor, and then took to flight across the field. The contents of the portemonnaie, 103 francs and ninety-five cents, were duly deposited in the poor-box of his parish church by the dealer.—Galignani's Messenger.

LORD STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE ON TURKEY.—From Smyrna we hear of Lord Stratford de Redcliffe inaugurating the opening of a railway there, and delivering a speech on the occasion, in which he describes the position of the Turkish empire, and lays down what he considers the duty of England towards it. It is the interest of England, he says, more than of any other Power, that the strength of Turkey should not decline, nor a despairing policy be adopted in the Levant, which might bring on that fierce struggle of partition which English statesmen have long endeavoured to avert. Without speaking hopefully of the regeneration of Turkey, the ex-Ambassador dwelt strongly on the slow progress of all great national growth, and the difficulties it has to encounter, and he recommended perseverance, and the infusion of English capital and enterprise into Turkey. "At all events," he said, "it is due to the honour and welfare of Europe that promises solemnly promulgated and accorded in formal treaties should not remain a dead letter, that the treasure and blood expended in her name for the vindication of Turkish rights should not be an idle sacrifice, and that the declared admission of Turkey into the great European family should be felt by the Ottoman Government as a reality in its obligations as well as in its benefits."

PROPOSED ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH WITHOUT A CABLE.—The Dundee Advertiser has seen, at Mr. Lindsay's, electrician, of that town, a model of a telegraph apparatus which communicates through water without any cable whatever. "This model," says our contemporary, "consists simply of a trough filled with water, on each side of which are two small copper plates, the plates on the one side being connected with a common electric battery; and it is found that, without any wire, the electricity passes through the water and makes signals on the other side in the ordinary manner—the theory being that the copper plates on the other side guide the electric current in the circuit desired. It may be objected that the results obtained in this model would not be obtained on a larger scale. Mr. Lindsay has not been able to carry out such experiments as he yet contemplates, but some time ago his system was tried at Portsmouth, and found to answer perfectly across water of the breadth of half a mile, and if it answers for that distance, there appears no reason why it should not answer for any distance on the face of the globe."

MICROSCOPIC PHOTOGRAPHY.—Mr. Amadio has furnished a curiosity of photography—a speck between the glasses, which, by the help of the microscope, proves to be a delicate and spirited portrait of Charles Dickens. The whole is nearly invisible to the naked eye; the microscope discloses the details of the most finished portraiture. It is an example of photographic power interesting in many ways. The Queen, it is said, has in a single ring a gallery of family portraits. A book for the waistcoat pocket might hold the whole picture story of travels round the world. A scrap of paper, indistinguishable from rubbish in the bottom of a pocket, might contain what under the solar microscope would become a great despatch.

The appearance of the comet created an immense sensation in Egypt; for several days all business and labour were at a standstill, the inhabitants believing that it foreshadowed some great calamity.
