JAMES SANFORD.
Pereaux, Cornwallis, Oct 27th, 1858.

The disappointment among the many grandes dames of the Faubourg St. Germain who had asked for tickets must have been immense. There were very few ladies in court. I observed the Countess of Montalembert, with one of her daughters and a friend, and Madame Arthur Berryer. There were not more than four or five other ladies in court.

The proceedings commenced by M. President Berthelin warning the auditory that no marks of approbation would be permitted—a warning which it will be seen in the sequel was not attended to.

M. de Montalembert, on being asked the usual preliminary questions, said that he was forty-eight years of age, an ex-peer of France, and a member of the French Academy, and that he was born in Paris. He answered all the questions put to him with the greatest frankness and the most perfect sang froid.

He acknowledged the authorship of the incriminated article in the Correspondent, but repudiated any intention of attacking the Government.

The Procureur—"But when you spoke of infected miasma and corrupt atmosphere, had you no intention of alluding to France?"

"Assuredly."
"You then deliberately attacked France and her institutions."

"I had no such intention, although I admit my preference for those of England, and the representative system of Government enjoyed by our neighbours; but I confined my observations strictly within the letter of the law."

"But you attacked France by your sneering at your country, as being held en tutelle—in leading-strings."

"The President does not appear to have done me the honour of reading my previous writings or speeches as on many previous occasions I had remarked on France being en tutelle."

"But your ironical praises of England were so many sneers at France."

"I had no such intention as you impute to me."

"You have said liberty has ceased to exist in France."
"And is it not true? Do not you, yourselves openly boast that liberty has ceased to exist? I have simply stated a fact, which is patent to the world. Liberty may have been crushed to preserve order; but that she has been crushed is notorious. Nor do I deem it a crime to state that which is true."

M. Cordouen, feeling probably that he had very little to stand upon in regard to the specific passages of the article in the Correspondent, on which his indictment was founded, relied especially upon the general spirit of the writing considered as a whole. He concluded by apostrophising M. de Montalembert as a man having lost the feelings of a Frenchman, and said, repeating the expression three times, "You have laid France prostrate at the feet of England; you have struck France in the face; yes, struck her in the face—unworthily struck her in the face."

M. Berryer, on rising, said that no one could have so well answered the charge made against M. de Montalembert as M. de Montalembert himself. He described the prosecution as "unjust, unfounded, ill-advised, and he was going to say—rash." On M. Berryer saying that to affirm that France did not now possess liberty was not an attack upon the Government, but merely the assertion of a notorious and undeniable fact, he was interrupted by

The President who said—"I cannot permit you, M. Berryer, to say such things. I affirm that France has a free government and liberal institutions, and this I repeat loudly, and without fear of denial."

"What!" exclaimed M. Berryer, "can I believe my ears, that you talk of liberty—you presume to talk of freedom, who have boasted of its annihilation? Let me hear no more such idle vaunting."

President—"In 1811, M. Berryer, you took an oath not to attack the laws which you now denounce."

M. Berryer, with a gesture of eloquent astonishment, continued—"Must I then throw up my brief? Have I lost my reason and conscience? Do I understand what the court means? Can it be that a counsel is to be construed as attacking the Government because he will not say that black is white? Why, it is the boast of the Government that it has barred liberty for order—and it has done so, it says, with the consent of the French people; and that I am not here to deny. Yes, France has repudiated her own liberty.

When M. Berryer sat down, loud, numerous, and simultaneous cries of "Bravo!" burst forth from the lower end of the court. The President ordered the police to turn out any one who had joined in the manifestation if they could find him.

The Procureur-Imperial's reply, which did not last more than a quarter of an hour, was even less effective than his opening speech.

M. Dufaure, maintained that the object of the Government was to suppress the Correspondent.

The President interrupted him, by assuring him that, although the journal had received two warnings, the Government did not intend to molest it any further.

"I am quite sure that you are in earnest, M. le President," replied M. Dufaure, "but I cannot take your word in this instance, as I doubt your having sufficient authority for making any such promise."

The court sentenced the Count to six months' imprisonment and a fine of 3,000 francs; and Duniol, the publisher, to one month's imprisonment and a fine of 1,000 francs; and fixes the duration of imprisonment, in default of payment, at one year.

PROGRESS OF DESPOTISM IN FRANCE.—The edition of The Times of Friday, containing the account of M. de Montalembert's trial, and the editions of Saturday, probably reproducing it, as well as the other English papers that have published it, in whole or in part, have all been stopped; not a number has been allowed to escape, except, perhaps, in favour of one or two privileged official persons. The English residents in Paris who are in the habit of receiving or reading The Times, and who are wont to look upon it as an indispensable part of their existence, are loud in their indignation.

Not content with stopping the papers, the Government officials are now tampering with the telegraph. The correspondent of The Daily News says:—"Thinking that under existing circumstances the curious and (since the days of the coup d'etat) unprecedented fact of almost all the London journals, whether morning, evening, or weekly, being seized in the French Post-office, (the reason being that they contained reports of the trial of Count de Montalembert) was a matter of public interest, I yesterday sent you a telegraphic despatch in the following words:—

"DAILY NEWS, LONDON.

"The Times, Daily News, Morning Post, Morning Chronicle, Express, Sun, Examiner, Spectator, Saturday Review, and almost all the weekly papers are seized."

My despatch was received at the telegraph office, and my messenger brought me back a receipt for the cost of transmission. This evening I received an intimation on an open piece of paper, without any signature, that my despatch "No. 23,859" was not forwarded, and no reason why is vouchsafed. If the officials concerned possess but a grain of common sense they must have known that all their zeal could only retard the knowledge of the truth in England some three or four hours. When will they learn that in attempting to injure the English press they bit a file? The French papers do not dare to state the reason for the razzia among the English journals. The Presse says, at the head of its news of the day, that the "English journals did not come to hand yesterday, for a reason which it is not for us to explain."

There is some rumour of a journal called the Courier de Dimanche being menaced with prosecution for an article on the Montalembert trial.

THE IONIAN ISLANDS.—The following telegram was received yesterday:—

"Vienna, Tuesday, Nov. 30.
