

of the Princes who had waited upon him in the morning. Possibly the laws of etiquette may in this case have been very agreeable to the great one, for it enabled him first to see all the Princes together, and then to give them a lesson privately and individually. Who can tell what devices were in the heart of the mighty? who shall fathom the depth of the thoughts of Kings? When the Emperor came forth from the hotel to his carriage, the populace of Baden gave him unmistakable evidence of their feeling towards him. Several gentlemen have assured me that his sing was very far in excess of the few notes of acclamation. Even in the Conversation House, where the elite of the visitors were assembled, the hisses were very distinct. When the Grand Duke afterwards appeared, the people cheered him very heartily, as if to show for whom the sounds of disapproval had been intended. After all, as far as I can judge, it is not what he has done, but what he may do, which causes this ill-feeling towards him. Sunday was the great day of discussion, deliberation, arrangement, or whatever else may have been the end and aim of the interview. The Emperor left for Strasbourg at ten o'clock p.m., and his train started in the midst of a silence more profound than I have ever remarked before. Standing on the edge of the crowd, I was astonished to the utmost at a stillness like that of death—a quiet which was not broken until the cause of it had departed; then every man breathed freely, and as the Duke of Baden rode back to his castle the people gave him loyal cheers which contrasted with the gloomy silence with which the Galtic despot had been greeted. To my mind there was something truly dignified in this noiseless censure. To his might but a display of weak impotence but to be sternly silent was the noble rebuke of resolute minds.

THE LONDON MORNING CHRONICLE—One of the oldest papers printed in the English language is about to be discontinued—the London Morning Chronicle. It was in the Chronicle that Sir Philip Francis—or somebody else—under a well preserved incognito, gave to the world the Janus Letters, the fame of which has not been confined to those countries where the English language is spoken. These letters appeared in the Chronicle during the term of office of its first editor, Woodfall, who introduced into his paper the custom of regularly reporting the debates in Parliament, a new feature in English journalism at the time. Woodfall was considered "a recklessly brave person" for having given publicity to the ideas of Janus, Burke, Fox and Sheridan. Tom Moore, Campbell, Goldsmith, Byron and Dickens may also be numbered in the brilliant array of writers for "the good old Whig of the Strand." The Chronicle was established in 1770, eighteen years before the Times, and thus, after a career of ninety years, it disappears from the list of British journals.

A plot to assassinate Louis Napoleon and Garibaldi was broken up at Rome, and it was discovered that the Emperor's head was valued at 500,000*l.* and Garibaldi's at 100,000*l.*

THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE and Lord Otho Fitzgerald were both ill from their horses at the Volunteer Review, but without receiving severe injury.

The Naval Commander-in-Chief has endeavored, in so far as the limited space of his command will admit, to afford accommodation on raised platforms, for the Members of the Government, the Legislature of the Province, the Mayor and Corporation, and others holding public appointments, for the purpose of witnessing the interesting event of His Royal Highness's landing in this Province. To these reserved places, cards of admission will be issued, signed by the Naval Commander-in-Chief. In addition to the raised platform, as much space as possible will be set apart for the use of the public, from whence a view of the landing or procession may be obtained.

On His Royal Highness leaving Halifax, a Royal salute will be fired from all Her Majesty's Ships.

ALEX. MILNE, Rear Admiral and Commander-in-Chief. P. S.—Any information which may be required will be readily afforded at the Naval Commander-in-Chief's office in the Dockyard, any day before 12 o'clock.

The Executive Managing Committee will trust to the good feeling of the public to co-operate with them in carrying out the foregoing programme, and in strictly preserving the order of arrangement, and particularly request that the spectators will refrain from pressing upon the lines of the procession, as any interruption will militate against the general harmony which all parties are interested in maintaining.
