Christian

Lessenger,

REPOSITORY OF RELIGIOUS, POLITICAL AND GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

"Aot slothful in business: ferbent in spirit."

NEW SERIES. Vol. VI....No. 3.

HALIFAX, NOVA SCOTIA, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 16, 1861.

WHOLE SERIES. Vol. XXV.....No. 3.

Poetry.

Life wears away.

Life wears away Like the rosy flush on the morning cloud, Like the flower's perfume by the strong wind bowed, Like the sunbeam's smile, like the night's dark Life wears away. Whether we do the good we may-Whether we spend it in work or play, Freeze in December or dance in May, Life wears away.

Life wears away, With its pleasures and pains, its hopes and fears, Its losses and gains, its smiles and tears; We may beckon to time, but he will not stay-Life wears away.

Life wears away ! With its restless nights and toilsome morns, Love crowns us with joy, or hate with thorns-The heart beats on with its loves and scorns-Life wears away.

Life wears away But heed it not, so look beyond, As a child for his home, with yearning fond; We may laugh at Time, that he will not stay, And smile in peace as life wears away.

Biographical.

For the Christian Messenger.

Memoir of the Rev. Samuel N. Bentley, A. M.

BY THE REV. HENRY ANGELL.

It is the testimony of inspiration, that "the righteous shall be in everlasting rememberance;" and while we may regard this truth He often alluded to the period of his conseas having a special reference to the recognitions and rewards of eternity, we have many cheering proofs that it is frequently verified in time. The influence of the lives and labors of the devoted servants of Christ is never lost on earth. Those who have been converted through their instrumentality will never forget them, the effects of their labors will be felt by future generations, and reach onward to eternity; while the records of their excellencies and deeds, will ever be a precious legacy to the church; and a constant incentive to higher attainments in the divine life, and greater usefulness in the church, and the world. To "glorify God" in them, and for them is our duty, and any memorial of their worth, however frail, that will to any extent accomplish this, we should carefully secure. In this, as well as in other respects, we may express our gratitude to God for His gifts, our high estimate of elevated piety, and may be animated to follow the example of those " who through faith and patience inherit the promises."

Influenced by these considerations, the writer, with mournful pleasure, records these brief memorials of a "brother, beloved in the Lord," with the regret, however, that the materials he has been able to secure are so scanty, and also, that our recently departed and excellent brother, Rev. Richard McLearn to whom this work was at first entrusted, did not live to perform it.

Samuel Newcomb Bentley was born at Upper Stewiacke on the 4th of July 1822. His parents were for many years exemplary members of the Baptist church in his native village and according to his own grateful testimony carefully instructed him in the principles of religion. His father was suddenly good degree" in the faithful discharge of his and achieve his greatest success. duties. The mother of our departed friend is still living.

rates.

sion to the many and encouraging evidences pised by the world,, but God was with them, Liverpool, and he gradually became convinced of this truth. The writer has more than and the widow's lowly abode was often " the that the united opinion of his brethren was once, heard him express his high estimate of gate of heaven," and became the spiritual the "voice of God." A few years afterwards, parental instruction, and also, his affectionate birth-place of many souls. The fervent pray- when his health was in a very critical state. regard for those beloved parents, who, in his ers of this devoted band "availed much." he said to the writer, "it is difficult for early years, "allured" him "to brighter Precious penticostal seasons ensued, under the me to give up my fondly cherished desire, but worlds, and led the way." The writer trav- preaching of Father Ansley, Rev. I. E. Bill, my brethren were right. I now see I am not elled with him to the Western Association and others. The church greatly increased in fitted to endure the hardships of foreign misconvened at Clarence in 1855, and it was numbers and influence. Plain, but commo- sionary labor." The comforting words addressduring the first session of that body that ti- dious houses of worship were erected in town ed by the Lord to his servant David, who was dings of his father's death reached him. and at Milton. In 1850, during the success- not permitted to fulfil his heart's desire in the This painful announcement almost overwhelm- ful pastorate of Kev. R. B. Dickey, it was erection of the temple, might with propriety ed him, yet he manifested the most entire re- thought desirable to form a new interest in be applied to our brother, "thou didst well, signation to the divine will. We passed the town. A church was accordingly organized, that it was in thine heart," as also Matthew ensuing night together at the house of a consisting of 42 members. Brother Bentley Henry's judicious comment on the passage; friend and before lying down to rest he pro- having recently returned to the province, the " sincere intentions to do good, shall be graposed we should mutually pray. In his pray- attention of the brethren in Liverpool was di- ciously approved, and accepted of God, er, he spoke of his irreparable loss, and pour- rected to him, as a suitable person to take the though Providence prevent our putting of ed forth his expression of gratitude to God, pastoral oversight of the new church. He them in execution." for the guardianship, and example of such a was accordingly invited to visit them. After In the summer of 1853 a costly and subfather, new a saint in glory. No one could attending the first session of the Western stantial sanctuary was erected by the people have listened to that prayer without the abid- Baptist Association, held at Yarmouth, he in the centre of the town. It was opened for ing conviction that there is a powerful in- immediately repaired to Liverpool, and com- the worship of God on the 22nd of July. fluence for good, in the counsels and instruct menced his labors, June 15, 1851. He was The venerable T. S. Harding was present, and tions of a pious parent.

learned comparatively nothing except what cepted. He was ordained Nov. 23rd, 1801, on Sabbath afternoons the meeting house was we gleaned from conversations with him in in the old Baptist meeting house. The ser- crowded. Brother Bentley preached with times past. He was it appears of a pensive vices, which were highly interesting, were unusual unction and power, and many were turn of mind from childhood. He was at conducted by Rev. Messrs. Dickey, Delong, deeply impressed. Two young persons gave times, troubled about the welfare of his soul. Deep convictions of sin, often cast a shade over his youthful pleasures. He feared death, trembled at the thought of his own vileness, a pastor. and God's holiness. At length God in mercy "dclivered his soul," and he found "peace, in believing" in Jesus. He ever afterwards looked back to the eighth day of July 1838, as the memorable period when he "passed from death unto life." Two years after this he made a public profession of religion. He was baptized by Rev. Abraham Stronach, October 25th 1840, and admitted to the fellowship of the Baptist church, Upper Stewiacke. cration to Christ in baptism, as one of the happiest seasons in his life.

A year or two after this, he commenced a course of study in the Institutions at Horton. At that time he proposed to devote his future life to the work of school teaching, although even then he had serious thoughts about the work of the christian ministry. His extreme conscientiousness, however restrained him from devotion to a service so solemn and responsible, until he was fully convinced that in doing so, he was "approved of God." He was always a firm believer in a special call to the gospel ministry. By this he did not mean an audible voice, or a mysterious omen bidding him bear the message of mercy to the guilty and the perishing, but an ardent quenchless desire for the work, a modicum, at least, of qualifications for it, and a deep conviction that he could be neither useful or happy, could neither do the will of God or as fully discharge his duty to a perishing world, convictions became more mature, as his consecration to the work has proved, and the signal manner in which God blessed his labors has fully justified his choice.

He remained at Horton about three years, after which he taught school in New Brunswick. In 1848 he repaired to the Newton Theological Institution, Mass., where he pursued the regular course of study, preparatory to the christian ministry. While a student at Newton he preached his first sermon. It was delivered in the Merrimac Baptist church, Boston, on the 7th of May, 1848, from Luke those who knew him, he appears to have been cause, in his native land. After a season of a man of industrious habits, of sterling in- itinerant labor, chiefly in portions of the protegrity, endowed with a vigorous understand- vince destitute of "the ministry of the word," ing, and truly devoted to his God He sus- his attention was providentally directed to tained for many years the office of deacon in that field of christian toil in which he was the church, and "purchased to himself a destined to put forth his most vigorous efforts,

The history of the Baptist cause in Liverpool and its vicinity is full of interest. Its way he should go," seldom "departs from it." veral years in a room in the humble dwelling high.

Brother Bentley's experience is another acces- of a poor widow.* They were feeble and des- day however began to dawn upon his labor at soon after called unanimously to the pastorate, preached the dedication sermon. The con-Of the early days of our brother, we have which call, after prayerful deliberation, he ac- gregation began rapidly to increase, and often Jas. Parker and Armstrong. Many observ- evidence of conversion, and were baptized, ed the deep solemnity and awe with which four others followed shortly afterwards. As Brother Bentley assumed the responsibilities of the interest increased it was thought desirable > pool was a season of anxious, and apparently agency for Acadia College, and rendered unsuccessful toil. The congregation was small timely aid. The spirit of God seemed gently and did not materially increase. The place to descend upon the people. Saints were and fitting him more fully for his work.

success in his present field of labor caused before the world. power. At a deeply interesting Missionary brother from that time, was greatly strengthwas accepted as foreign missionary, Brother more confidence and fervour than previously. Bentley touchingly alluded to his own con- In 1854 and 55 he frequently performed build a place of worship, met in a small room in her house. Her zeal and activity kept the church from extinction. When the 2 or 3 ma e members declined to hold a series of meetings. Rev. John Brother Bentley's first two years in Liver- Francis visited Liverpool at the time on an of worship was inconveniently situated, being quickened, backsliders reclaimed, and souls at one end of the town, and at times was al- hopefully converted. Brother Bently apmost inaccessable, the road leading to it being peared awakened to new life. His appeals in occasionally overflowed by the tide. The the sanctuary were exceedingly tender and people generally became warmly attached to solemn, and his visits from house to house their pastor, and cheerfully co-operated with were greatly blessed. One baptismal season him in his "work of faith," still there were will long be remembered. The solemn rite no ascertained cases of conversion to God. was administered in the baptistry which had Brother B. was at times much discouraged, just been erected in the church, and the scene and his faith was sorely tried. He feared he was rendered unusually impressive, from the was not the right man for the place. "The fact that each of the candidates had been the people" said he, to the writer with tearful subjects of many prayers. There were the eye, "are very kind, very united and prayer- father and son, together "putting on Christ." ful, and my love to them increases, but oh, The former had for years been an influential my heart's desire is not realized, souls are not merchant in the place, and had long strugsaved." Though discouraged, he did not gled against his convictions. But fervent wane in efforts. He seemed only to work the prayer was answered and grace had triumphharder. God was doubtless trying his faith, ed. There too, were the husband and sister of one of " the excellent of the earth," who in About this time (1852) Brother Bentley's an adjoining dwelling was fast wasting away attention was turned to the Foreign Mission- with consumption, calmly awaiting the sumary field, and he became deeply impressed mons to her rest above. Her desire was now with the conviction that it was his duty to accomplished, and she could cheerfully say, preach the gospel to the heathen. He had 'now Lord let thine handmaid depart in thought seriously upon the subject before. peace for mine eyes have seen thy salvation.' While a student at Newton he had frequently There also were a brother and sister the conversed with two of his class-mates who children of one who had once been a baptist were under appointment to the Foreign field, minister. Sad changes had separated them and he had felt his mind stirred to a kindred for years. They had recently met again, to in any other vocation. In after years his sympathy with theirs. Apparent want of unitedly embrace the Saviour, and confess him him to fear that, like Jonah of old, he had The heart of the pastor was cheered by the disobeyed the Lord, and in consequence of gracious revival. "Tearful sowing" was this his impressions returned with resistless now followed with "joyful reaping," and our meeting, held in connexion with the Baptist ened in his faith in God. It was remarked Convention, assembled at Sackville N. B. in by many that after the revival he preached 1852, at which time Rev. Atthur Crawley with greater freedom of utterance, and with victions. A committee was appointed to con- missionary tours in Shelburne Co. chiefly tofer with him upon the subject. After prayer- Ragged Island and Sable River, These visite ful consultation, they wisely concluded, that were very acceptable to the people. Several as Brother Bentley's health was feeble, it persons dated their first religious impressions would be injudicious to appoint him to a fo- from discourses delivered during these excur-Thus equipped for his good work, he re- reign field. This decision was confirmed by sions. The church at Ragged Island invited turned to Nova Scotia, resolved, with true the Convention at Nictaux in 1853. Brother him to the pastorate, but his usefulness in summoned to his rest, during the summer of christian patriotism, to devote his remaining Bentley was keenly disappointed. At first, Liverpool constrained him to decline the in-1855. From the concurrent testimony of days to the advancement of the Redeemer's he felt unreconciled to the decision, and vitation. In the spring of 1855 Brother thought of offering his services to the Ameri- Bentley's labors were greatly blessed, and the can Baptist Missionary Union. A brighter church was again visited with a delightful " time of refreshing from the presence of the I allude to the late Mrs. Dolivar," a mother in Isreal," she was baptized by Rev. D. Nutter, and united with the Liverpool church at its organization. The church, being few in number, and unable to ed to the churches. During the revival Brother Bentley's health gave way before intense labour for the welfare of souls, and fears to conduct the meetings, she gave out the hymns were for a while entertained that his work on Home influence and training have much to do with the future course and spiritual well-being of the young. A child trained "in the being of the young. A child trained "in the work of faith, Dec. 26th 1856 aged 84. Her record is on Although work of the home of the ministers of Christ, and she maintained her love to the cause until death. She died in the triumphs of faith, Dec. 26th 1856 aged 84. Her record is on Although work of the home of the ministers of Christ, and she maintained her love to the cause until death. She died in the triumphs of faith, Dec. 26th 1856 aged 84. Her record is on Although work of the home of the ministers of Christ, and she maintained her love to the cause until death. She died in the triumphs of faith, Dec. 26th 1856 aged 84. Her record is on Although work of the more faith. Although unable to preach, he attended a