Shall we who have an annual ague fit because of the periodical prowlings of plunderers and traitors around our capital, lift up our voices to say who shall or shall not dwell in the halls of Montezuma? Alas that our past proud and not unworthy purposes for progress and freedom should come to nought, and the taunting cry ring in our ears, "Ichabod, Ichabod, thy glory has departed!" A European monarch may achieve what Mexican patriots under the mocking motto of "God and Liberty,' have failed to produce during half a century of insurrection and blood."

This worship at the shrine of Napoleon is in perfect keeping with the following silly expression concerning Britain, in the same article:
