House Plants,

Do not remove the plants to the hove until there is danger of frost; and then give them abundance of air and light. And here we will say that some of the finest plants we ever saw were kept in a south chamber in which there was no fire, but adjoining a room which was warmed by a stove. There is generally more danger from too much heat than too little. For such plants as geraniums petunias, fuchsias, roses, oleanders, etc., a temperature from 45 to 62 degrees is abundantly warm.

Perhaps the greatest obstacle to success in window gardening lies in the dryness of the air. When houses were warmed in the oldfashioned way by fire-places or wood stoves, with abundance of cracks at the windows and doors to let in fresh air, plants grew very well. And now, when a lew plants are kept in a kitchen window, where the air is charged with vapor from the boiling water, they often thrive with old-fashioned luxuriance. How, then can we modify the parched air of our parlors and sitting-rooms? One way is to keep a pan of water evaporating on our stoves and in the air-chamber of our furnaces. In addition to this, provide a table for the plants a the window and just the height of the window-sill. Fasten a rim around the border of the table two inches high, and line the whole with zinc. Fill this space with sand and cover it with moss. Set the pots on this sand, and keep it always moist. If you are willing to take the trouble, set each pot in another one, half an inch larger, filling the space between with moss, which is to be kept moist. By these means, the air around the plants will be kept somewhat humid.

As to watering and ventilating, discrimination should be used. As a general rule, water thould be given copiously enough to wet the entire ball of soil; wetting simply is not enough. A daily sprinkling or syringing of the leaves is always a good thing. In ventilating, it is seldom safe, in cold weather, to open the windows directly in front of the plant stand. A better way is to let in air from a window on the opposite side of the room; will then become tempered a little before reaching the plants.

Stir the soil often with a small stick when it is dry. If insects appear, pick them off, or kill them by famigating .- Rural Amer.

TREE PLANTING .- In planting trees this fall, all should remember that it is requisite to set the tree only just so deep as to enable it to stand, for we can place earth around it so as to protect it from heaving off the winter's frost and as soon as spring opens, and the ground is levelled down, the roots will start and seck their appropriate depth. If we dig a deep hole, especially in hard clay soil, and fill it with good loam, and set our tree therein, we first invite the water there, as into a cistern -and second, we cause a vigorous growth of roots, until they reach the undisturbed clay, when a check is at at once perceptible: and often an orchard stands from five to seven years without apparently making any progress. Remember, then, and plant your trees just so deep as to cover their roots, but no more; then earth up for a winter protection against frost for the year, and dress down again to a level in the spring .- Horticulturist.

An experiment made last year in Germany, in planting potatoes, showed that where the eyes had first been removed, the yield was tour times as great as where they were left in their places. It was found that where an old eye had been rubbed off, three or four new ones made their appearance.

THE SCIENCE OF HEALTH.

Every Man his own Physician.

HOLLOWAY'S CINTMENT.

Disorders of the Stomach, Liver and Bowels.

The Stomach is the great centre which influences the health or disease of the system; abused or debilitated by excess—indigestion, offensive breath-and physical prostration are the natural conse-quences. Allied to the brain, it is the source of headaches, mental depression, nervous complaints, and unrefreshing sleep. The Liver becomes affected, and generates bilious disorders, pains in the side, &c. The Bowels sympathise by Costiveness, Diarrhea, and Dysentery. The principal action of these Pills is on the stomach, and the liver, lungs, bowels, and kidneys participate in their recuperative and regenerative operation.

Erysipelas and Salt Rheum
