The diminution and cure of crime is an aim worthy of the highest philanthropist. There is mawkish sentimentalism abroad which would almost abolish punishment. On the other hand there is a disposition in some minds that would inflict the most severe and painful penalties upon lawbreakers, with the idea that if this were always done, men would be more generally deterred from the commission of crime.

In the administration of justice it is perhaps the certainty of punishment that operates as a restraint more than the severity of it. The chances of escape do away with its terrors.

The following brief paragraphs will shew the spirit of this benevolent enterprise. The men engaged in it will doubtless be blessed in their deed.

"The problem how to dispose of discharged convicts, how to hold them to their honest intents, and prevent their relapse, is one of the most perplexed and difficult in the whole science of penology. Yet, to save the released criminal, especially when he has left the penitentiary with a determination to engage in a course of honorable industry, is an object of the highest importance to the communi-ty, as well as to himself. The effect of punishment, under the present state of public sentiment, destroys in great measure, the convict's prospect on his discharge.

The ignominy of his imprisonment clings to him in his freedom. Society does not trust, and therefore will not employ him.
Thus a popular punishment, as unjust as it is cruel, follows the legal penalty he has undergone, and the liberated criminal is often driven to the hard necessity, whether he will or no, of returning to crime to avoid the horrors of starvation."

"The problem whose solution we seek, and which to-day is made an object of such wide and earnest study—the proper treatment of crime and criminals is one of the most important and vital in the whole scope of social science. We have no thought that in our day, by any process known or likely to be discovered, can the bitter fountain of criminality be dried up. But we do believe, in all sincerity, that its pestilent issues may be materially lessened by the application of right principles and methods to its treatment. We earnestly ask the help of our fellow-citizens in this work; and we do so in the full confidence that whatever money they may be pleased t) contribute towards it will be well expended, and, like bread cast upon the waters, will be ' found after many days.' Registration of Letters, containing Money, Cheques, or Articles of Value.

Notice to the Public.

The Post Office Department having gone to a great deal of trouble and expense to ensure, as far as possible, the safe transmission of money by Mail, it is much to be regretted that the public will still continue to send through the Post Office letters containing money, cheques, or valuable papers without availing themselves of the money order system, or having their letters registered, thee harge for which is now only two cents. The safest mode of remitting is by money orders, but in places where there are no money order offices, the Registration system should be taken advantage of.

When an unregistered letter, stated to contain money, goes astray, suspicion rests not only upon the Post Office Employees by whom the letter has been handled, but upon the sender, and receiver also, for it has been known that parties owing money, when pressed for payment in the hope of either evading the debt altogether, or gaining more time in which to pay it, have stated that their remittance had been duly forwarded through the Post Office, when on investigation it was found that no remittance hed ever been made at all.

A careless or dishonest man may receive an unregistered letter containing money, and torget, or intentionally omit to acknowledge its contents; in either case, however, the Post Office is blamed, when, in reality, in many instances, no blame should have been attached

In connection with the foregoing remarks, I annex an extract from a report of the Post Master General at Canada;

"If the consequence of this procedure were imited to the mere risk of the loss of the money so sent, the senders of money in unregistered letters might reasonably urge that if they chose to encounter the risk, they should be free to do so; but higher considerations are involved in the question, and the chance of loss to the careless remitter is really but the smallest part of the evil associa with the practice.

"The point of most importance to this country is the cruel temptation which the enclosure of money in unregistered letters throws in the way of the numerous body of persons employed in this branch of the public service.

"Against actual dishonesty on the part of Post Office employees, a registered letter is incomparably more secure than an unregistered one, to an unregistered letter leaves no trace behind it whilst passing in the great stream of ordinary correspondence, though its presence as a money letter, and the nature of its contents are, to any person accustomed to handle letters, as manifest as though the letter had been singled out and marked by the registered stamp. "Moreover, the safety of an unregistered letter is dependent on the jutegrity of a Post Office clerk, during the whole time is remains in his custody, irequently for hours and even days, whilst a registed letter will, almost inment of its passing into an officer's hands, and cannot therefore be suppressed without leaving him individually accountable for its

These remarks are so true and forcible, that I would earnestly recommend their attentive perusal, especially by those who are in the habit ot sending money, &c., by mail, in eseregistered letters; and I would further suggesthat letters containing money should invariably, be scaled with letter scaling was.
