all appear in his lifetime. One of the missionaries of the English Baptist Missionary Society died recently in Cameroons, Africa. We copy the following from the Missionary Herald, September, 1880, in reference thereto:

DIBUNDU AND KING AQUA.

Mrs. Saker has just received the following letter from "Dibundu," of Aqua's Town, Cameroons, one of Mr. Saker's converts, who devotes himself to evangelistic work amongst his own people:

"DEAR MRS. SAKER,-I take up my ink to send you a short account of what is going on. I hope you will excuse all mistakes. King Aqua was up country when he heard of dear Mr. Saker's death; he was bitterly sorry, and all his people too, because they cannot forget all the good work Mr. Saker did in Cameroons River and all round about. So the king resolved he would make a law for his town, all of his own accord, in remembrance of Mr. Saker, that no work should be done on Sundays, but all ought to go to worship. So on Sunday, May 8th, all the people with one accord came to our chapel, which was over full, and many more outside could not get in. "You will remember us, please, in your prayers that the good work may go on, and many be converted to Jesus. "Yours truly,

"DIBUNDU."

Sister Spidle was an affectionate and devoted wife, a never-failing friend, and a true and faithful christian, one whose daily walk was eminently consistent with her christian profession. She always cherished a warm interest in the success of Christ's cause, both at home and abroad, and was a well-wisher of Zion. Her last illness extended over a period of many months, during which she often suffered much, yet she uncomplainingly assured her friends that for her death had no terrors, for her trust was on "Christ the solid rock," and that she but waited for Him to take her home. She has truly left the assurance that for her to die was gain. A kind husband and a wide circle of friends deeply deplore their loss.—Com. by Rev. M. W. Brown.
