CHRISTIAN MESSENGER.

NOVEMBER 26, 1884.

family Reading.

-

For the Christian Messenger. To my Lady at Rest.

The moonbeams glint upon the quiet stream That wanders gently by my lady's bower; Their softly falling light doth brightly gleam, O'er hill and tower.

Calm is the night ! all things of peace partake So deeply that the brooklets' murmuring sound.

Disturbeth not the quiet, but doth make, Peace more profound.

The nightingale's sweet song no sadness hath.

Peacefully singeth she of love and rest, The spirit of the night has found a path, Into her breast.

The bird sings on, the streamlet gently flows And while the moon her quiet vigil keeps Harmonious with the evening's calm repose, My lady sleeps.

THEO. Along the chilly mosaic floor of the hall, up the broad staircase, down a wide heavily-paneled corridor, past and she gratefully wonders if so pretty open doors which reveal luxurious a place has really been allotted her as apartments bathed in the soft light of ber own. It is so nice to know that waxen tapers, but without occupants, some tender provision has been made Mrs. Hurd's niece follows Mrs. Hurd's for her coming ; her heart rises like a feather, when presently the maid spoils servant.

'Old Sampthon don't care ; she asked anything quite like this, She has no about 'old Samthon,' turns down the fair little Moses in the boat of rusties me could I see to myself and let her go desire to 'know the worst.' But Theo light, kneels by the bedside. When down.'

and kiss the tiny representative of her kindred. The child quietly puts up her jeweled hand and rubs off the kiss. "I fink you ith the couthin !"

'Yes, little Floss, I fink I am, And who are you ?'

"Name ithn't Floth-name Mith Theo.'

She looks her new relative over with quite a grown up stare of curiosity. But the 'new relative' feels a warm sister !' thrill from head to toot ; for surely

"Theo' must be "the diminutive of Theodosia, and that is the beloved name of her own dear mother. Aunt Alice must have bestowed the quaint old-fashioned appellation upon her lovely little girl out of pure sisterly affection-it gives her, for the moment, a warm feeling toward Aunt Alice. The servant shuts Miss Theo within her violet bower, and going up a short stair at the end of the corridor, she throws open a door, enters and lights the gas. This, by contrast, is a plain room. The carpet of oak-and-green is pretty.'

only an ingrain, and the furniture bambco. But it is like a parlor in in comparison with any apartment this hamlet-born Lois has ever occupied; is so pretty-the little pearly teeth, she rises she finds Theo sitting up in Lois divines easily that this is a and the pink shell-like ears, and the bed, looking at her with big eyes. little cousin. She presumes to stoop dimpled chin-she laughs merrily and When she has laid down by her side, catches the child close. And my pay the little hand comes feeling through -wonder whether I shall have to take the dark for her cheek. ' Couthin,' the it in blue-eyed kisses !'

"Mamma thaid you would have your minithterth pray, but ladieth don't." board and clothe.

"What, no kisses ? Shall I be forced and your sisters do. Theo herself to steal what kisses I want? for I can't possibly live without them. Do you she goes to bed?'

know, mousie, that poor 'couthin' has no para, nor mamma, nor any little

But 'Mousie' does not seems to care for that, and presently slides down from her lap. Lois fancies she ponders it, to sleep,' She has noticed that the marble however, And when she turns to her basket, and is unlading it, the child returns, leans upon her lap and quietly scientific toys and rare pictures, everyregards her while she eats what remains thing to develop the baby intellect and of her traveling lunch,-looks at her as waken the baby fancy. Doubtless the at some strange being that appears to wee creature would babble charmingly eat with a relish cake that is made with of fairies and brownies should she be brown sugar and destitute of frosting. questioned ; but of the dear Father in Lois finishes her meal. Then she turns | Heaven, as ignorant as a pagan child ! to her little cousin again. 'So your And did not Mr. Nelson say that Mr.

name is Theo,-just like you, short and and Mrs. Hurd were among the pillars That ticket drew a gold watch worth of Dr. Guthrie's church?

"Theodothia Lee Hurd,'lisps the baby statelily. Ab, the family name tion. "I want to athk you thingth. entire ! Lois thinks of it tenderly. couthin. What makth folkth pray?' Her own dear mother always wrote her 'Did mamma never tell you about name 'Theodosia Lee Gladstone,' and God ?' Lois inquires quietly. grandmother was ' Mrs. Theodosia Lee,' and her own name is Lois Theodosia. Aunt Alice's heart must be tender toward homely memories and family traditions. She cannot refrain from kissing the little wearer of the stately family name, who this time slyly presses her rosy cheek against her cousin's 'I fink you will be nifer than Sampthon. How do you punish 'ittle girlth?' she adds. Luis smiles, but does not disclose the 'Why, couthin-do you know God ? terrible secret. 'That can make no the child exclaims in surprise and possible difference to a good little girl wonder. "But,' she reasons presently, who ought this moment to be cuddled 'he wathn't here-he couldn't hear in her own pretty nest fast asleep with you." her head under her wing,' she says; Yes, he was here, Theo. We canand much against her will that 'good not see him, that is all. But h little girl' presently finds herself deposited under her own lace tent. The what we say aloud and what we think delicate coverlet is tucked about her, to ourselves.' as the talkative yet respectful servant she is kissed and left. thus lifts a corner of the curtain of her <sup>2</sup> I shall never dislike the care of the thtories, couthin, like Sampthon.' Future; but before she can make any pretty creature,' Lois thinks, as she reply the door is pushed open, and her closes her own door. 'What a bad ungrateful girl I was for a moment? I baby-mind. 'You naughty Miss! in your bare dare say aunt considered that I should be happier with some employment, and arm. But the child draws away with lisping baby voice says, 'papas and

" Ob, darling, yes they do. Mamma surely has some little prayer to say when

The little one does not seem to know this; and it gives Lois a strange feeling, to come across a child that does not even know 'Now I lay me down to table in the blue chamber is strewn with picture books and costly playthings,

Theo herself resumes the conversa-mysterious Egyptian river. She tells heard the little boy's mother and sister when they prayed to him about their baby and took such care of their darling, that, at last, he was found by a beautiful lady and taken into a palace to live, and was brought up as a prince.

The child remains wide awake to the end. . The betht friend ' she says, "ith ath nithe, and ath powerful, ath any fairy Sampthon ever told me of.'

Presently she nestles nearer still to Lois; with a long sleepy sigh, she lisps very well what the cousin means by out her last remark for the night-" But a couthin, I fing, ith the nithetht fing in the-

> "In the world' Lois dreamily pre sumes she meant to say; and then in another moment she, too, is fast asleep

Father and Son.

interpreter and the second of the of

YOUNG MAN SAID TO HIS FATHER.

"A man,' said the son, " came into the office a few days ago with the last one of two or three hundred tickets, and offered it to me for a dollar. I doclined to buy it. He then went out side and sold it to a laboring man one hundred and fifty dollars.' WHAT THE FATHER SAID TO THE SON

'If you had bought that ticket you would have possessed a watch paid for by three hundred people giving a dollar each. You would have been but one of that number. Would you like to wear a watch paid for by two hundred and ninety-nine of your neighbors Would you enjoy a watch worth one hundred and fifty dollars which cost you but one dollar? Would that make you feel manly? Would that inspire in you honesty and noble sentiments? Would the wearing of a valuable watch obtained in that way give solidity and fine proportions to your manhood No, my son, such transactions, by laws, as unyielding as the pillars of heaven, will blunt honesty, blight virtue and blacken character.

self. Better work on such occasions i floating safely so many days upon the log not done by the average pastor at home than is done by Elder Po San. He is the Theo how this same Best Friend had only ordained man we have left, the others having died.

Of ordained Preachers our experience is satisfactory. They have been good and true men ; and we think that in every case the "laying on of hands." and the prayer offered over them, has brought with it some spiritual gift. They seem to have had a new sense of responsibility, and a spirit of increased faithfulness to Christ. We informed the church at one of these meetings. that they needed more ordained helpen Elder Po San himself addressed the brethren, calling upon them to take the matter into consideration, and begin to look out from among themselves men of faith and earnest pnrpose to be ordained at no distant date.

THE DISCIPLINE. - One was the case of a man at Jio Peng, who had been a gambler, and who had fallen into his old vice. On being exhorted he showed no signs of repentance, and arrogantly told the preacher to tell the church to exclude him. This was done and notice will be posted at the chapel. Two other members at the same place had been guilty of drawing up a petition to the district magistrate, in which the name of the church was used to induce leniency towards an evil-doer,-a friend of the parties but not a member of th church. These were suspended irom communion, and a sharp letter of rebuke was sent by the church-clerk. The petition was not sent in. .... Had it been the consequences to them would have been much more serious? Then CO again a woman at Kit-ie was found vil guilty of unwomanly conduct and was excluded. 00 IDOLATRY IS EXPENSIVE, for nearly all the amusements of the people are connected with it; and thus is idolatry doubly strong. The theatre, Punchand Judy shows, fireworks, racing, and even gambling, are all more or less adjuncts of their religious worship, and practically are parts of it. These are all the great and most absorbing interests of idolatrous feasts. The thousands of at temples many of them richly endowed; an the manufactories of idols and paper and fireworks, and the thousand and one things used in worship; and all the varied interests involved .- present obstacles, simply from a monetary point of view, of no mean importance in estimating the success of missioas i China. It is very difficult to reach any average estimate. I have frequently estimated with the Chinese the average expenditure of the families upon idolatry and they have set it at from $75 to and impressive way. About three $100 annually. Putting it at $50 per hundred people were gathered around family would make a yearly expenditure of $350,000,000 upon idolatrous strangers, who witnessed the ceremony, rites.-REV. F. K. JUNOR, in The The English Baptist Missionary Committee has approved the establishment of ten stations on the Upper completely out of sight-all in a wink. little Theo's word that they are here. gratified with the discussion and the Congo, between Stanley Pool and Stanley Falls, to bs about 100 miles fast, and finally Lois laughingly desists. is here, only we can't see him by any made, that the churches are held too apart, and each to be manned by two draped with the same snowy lace over low, cozy, pink chintz chair that stands 'Why not?' she says. 'It could do no light which we have now. There is long in leading-strings. With all hon- missionaries. Three of these stations something between us and God-just esty, I think we may say that we have to be begun the present year, one of like the dark-and it hides him just as not been greatly guilty of that sin in this which is to be at Lukolela, where a site the dark hides chairs and tables. But mission. We do speak with 'all au- has already been secured. Six new still he is here. There will come a thority,' that is, Scripture authority, missionaries are also to be sent out bebeautiful shining morning to us by-and- when we point out the course they ought fore the close of the year, if they can by, when the light we have now will be to pursue. But we have them shoulder be obtained. The estimated yearly expense of the stations on the Upper Congo is from £4,000 to £5,000, considerably less than stations nearer the coast, on account of the abundant supply of food and building-materials. 'Ith he papath betht friend too, and shaking at times. The results fully The stations in the interior will be much more healthy than on the Lower Congo. No European has yet died on the Upper Coogo except from accident. In his journey up the river, Mr, Grenfell found that, the farther he went, the more populous the country became. In Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar, there are 26 Christian churches, all connected with the London Missionary Society. The population of the city is about 100,000.-A hundred and nine natives of New Guines are now members of Christian churches, all in the London Society Missions .- The total income of the Society for the past year was £102,563. Lois wonders some at the storm she So the older girl puts in words suffi- them the hand of fellowship, and broke 4s. 4d. (about $510,000), and the debt dy Th clo is no the W wa the Ne cry sid len out cei of for wi Pa

_

RAI

for ten

the

dro

for

It is to her as a page out of the it all. Arabian Nights; yet step by step she . This be the room, Miss, which Miss shrinks into herself. She is oppressed Theo's maid has; and bein'as Sampson by these mute suggestions of an elegant is to go Saturday, the missus said that and luxurious daily lite. She has been you might as well 'ave the room' at accustomed to simple, homely, cordial onct, and Sampson go down-stairs with us while she staid. You'll hear the ways. She knows nothing of this taking guests in state to their apartrising bells all over the 'ouse, and you ments upou arrival. This in itself is needn't feel to disturb yourself till you 'ears 'em. I could wish, Miss, as some sufficient to chill her.

Her mother and she have lived in of the family were 'ere to meet you, but master and missus and the young such a small cozy bird's-nest way she ladies be all out to aswedding, and, I feels she shall not know at all what is expected of her here, and she dreads dare say, won't be 'ome till midnight, her relatives with a fresh dread. She so you'd better not wait up.' does venture, however, upon Lois has stood somewhat bewildered the independence of hoping that it is the custom of such stately houses to duly provide the famished guest with supper.

Homesick, tired and hungry, she thus silently follows on, when her eye tiny relative appears. and step are both arrested at the open door of a room fitted up in the most feet, too !' The maid takes her by the exquisite of blue and white.

a sharp blow and a rebellious cry, and 'Oh, beauty, beauty! here is the then, finding berself still borne along, blue heaven of summer time with all she stretches a little hand back to Lois. the fleecy clouds !' Lois murmurs to herself. She involuntarily steps upon "I had thingths to thay to you. couthin,' she sobbingly lisps, all the the threshold to look in. She sees a child's tiny couch standing under while with the hand pounding the arm fanciful canopy of lace. It stands that swiftly convoys her. quite in the centre of the daintily

Lois presumes upon the cousinship frescoed room, upon a carpet of pale acknowledged by the little creature. azure strewn with lilies and purple Besides, she likes children, and dearly black pansies; and she divines that enjoys the 'thingths' they have to say. 'I think you may leave her,' she says. the occupant must lately have been there, for the laced pillows show the "I will see that she is put safely back print of a small head, and the blue in bed." The girl, after a little besitation, silken coverlet with its embroidered white lilies is tossed carelessly aside.

the door, and drop down in Sampson's The toilette and the windows are so, indeed I shall.' She bustles about cheerfully, as she takes this view of things, and is just ready to extinguish the light, and go to the child. . There ith a table, there ith bed with a heart at peace with everybody, when she hears her door soitly unclosing, and that baby appears once more upon the threshold. ' Theo will pleathe theep in your bed.'

While Lois besitates, the little creature runs and clasps both arms around her knees. 'I love you, couthin, ever and ever tho much !' and up she clambers, disclosing little pink feet, into the bed, and down under the clothes, and The tiny hands hold sheet and coverlet Now do you take cousin's word. God outcome. Complaint is sometimes Mamma never had.

'Oh Theo, Theo! don't you know anything about him at all?'

Theo answers promptly, 'Yeth, at the church. Doctor Guthrie talkth about him every Thunday.'

But I know him, too,' Lois interrupts softly. 'He is my friend-and when I knelt, Theo, I was telling him what I wished for, and thanking him for what he has already done for me.

sees us, and he hears all the while,

He ithn't here. I gueth you tel Lois tried a long time to think how sh may present the idea of Spirit to the ' Well, Theo,' she says at last, putting up her hand and touching the carved head-board, 'there is'nt anything in this room except the bedstead.'

'Oh, yeth there ith,' quickly replies chairth, there ith a mirror.'

'No,' says Lois, obstinately. 'My eyes are wide open. I look, but I don't see one of those things you said were here-so they can't be here.'

• Yeth they be,' says the baby. . . The dark ith all over them now, but in the morning you'll thee 'em.'

"Why, yes, so I shall,' says Lois. the dark was over them-I will take discipline.

An intelligent Baptist gives the fol lowing true inwardness of a thriving Church : " I verily believe our churches thrive according to the way that they support their own schools, their own pastors and their own paper.

If is a strange fact that wise mer learn more from fools than fools do trom wise men.

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCH

BAPTISM .- A letter from Dr. Ashmore, at Swaton, dated July 7th, 1884, says : Yesterday twelve converts were baptized here. Elder Po San administered the ordinance, and did it, as he usually does, in a solemn the pool, one third of whom were and listened to the service, in profound Christian at Work. silence.

One of the most interesting meetings of the week was held Tuesday "Of course I couldn't see them when afternoon, to consider some cases of We were exceedingly is beginning to ache, yet the room is so wrought and enamelled with lilies and violets, even the little fanciful blue dainty, even if it be only an upper serchairs are decorated with the same vant's, that she eagerly looks about and exquisite semblance of flowers ; anddelights herself with the thought that it ab, here is somebody at last-a tiny is to be her own ! If the world should princess left behind in the deserted go wrong in every direction, she can palace. No Wester in the Reiner Print steal up here and forget it all; and that Lois' eyes light at the sight of anythe world will be quite likely to go thing so natural and so simple herewrong she forebodes as she falls to for it is a live little girl, so naughty as pondering the servant's revelations of to be, in her night-dress, out of bed the ' Missus' ' plans.

and running about with bare feet. She has come round from a corner where a light is burning on a bracket, studying her face. She rouses, takes and the tumbled picture book in her hand betrays her stolen occupation. . Well, of what are you thinking, little The little face set in the flossy curls is one ?' she says. a rosy one, her eyes are bluest blue as · Little one' shakes her curly head. becomes the mistress of such a room, and the small parted lips disclose fings.'

leaves them; and Lois is glad to shut dainty white teeth, as in great surprise she comes toward the stranger, drop- physician upon her lap. 'You pretty afraid of her. 'Hoity-toity!' she cries. ping her picture book to hold up her baby, am I really to have the care of 'What is it my ears hear-Miss Theo trailing robe. you ?

' Why, Miss Theo !' says the servant, when I go down I must sure tell it appears ; and she bestows her infor- Mrs. Hurd-I wash my hands of it !' she likes to hear stories ; and of course ample, at the present communion, Elder Sampson that you have never been to mation freely. 'Yeth, you be,' she and out she flounces. sleep yet." says. 'Mamma thaid you could, and harm, only some one ought to know where she is.'

She reasons thus aloud. Thereupon. Theo emerges, red, puffing, panting, half-suffocated, and eagerly suggests the bell-rope. After vigorous pulls, at intervals, some one is heard coming up the back stairs. It proves to be Sampson. Sampson is a large red-faced woman, highly dressed. She looks altogether capable of being disagreeable, and without hesitation she proceeds to

But finally she realizes that her be so. She quite scorns Lois' greeting kinswoman is standing at her knees, but pounces upon Theo, amid deafening cries of ' couthin ! couthin !" Lois tries off her gloves, and unties her hat. to explain, and finally does make herself heard, by instinctively using some show of authority.

'I fink-I fink 'ittle bits of so many insolence. She knows very well what this pale brown-eyed girl's position is Lois smiles, and lifts the small meta- to be in the household ; she is not at all

Hurd to sleep in this room ? But, it The pretty baby knows all about it, is naught to me. You may answer to as busily as herself. She asks her if them do their own baptizing. For ex-

The little hand waves her away, the then thee could thave Sampthon' wageth.' has raised, and then softly closes the ciently vivid and simple for baby-ears the bread at the communion ; the second at the close of the year was £3,749 85blue eyes never moving from Lois Poor Lois had not wished to elict door, hushes the baby who is muttering the ancient story of another baby-of the part of the service being taken by my- 6d.

changed into another light so bright and their own responsibilities, and conduct clear that we can see him plain ly,-see their own meetings. They all underthis God whom I pray to, to whom I go stand this; and, instead of their trying for the things I need. I love him, to break loose from us, the tendency is Theo; he is my best friend.'

Doctor Guthrieth betht friend ?' 'Yes.'

The little one muses. Then says meetings, except occasionally; though she, with childish logic. "What good we are always present to help, and give timeth you and papa will have talking advice. We require them to examine about him, and Doctor Guthrie when their own candidates tor baptism, ad-Sampson's cheeks swell with inward he comth-he comth moth every day.' thinking of 'papa and Doctor Guthrie,' is, that they have learned how to conand wonders whether she and they ever duct church-business. At communions will talk about him. She becomes consci- also, we invariably have a native elder ous at last that the child's eyes are wide taking the lead, though we also at times open, and that she is probably thinking participate. We desire, also to have Theo does.

minister their own discipline, and to Lois does not answer. She falls to put their own votes. The consequence

Po San baptized the candidates, gave to hold on; and we have to do a little. justify the policy. For a dozen years we have not presided at their church-