CHRISTIAN MESSENGER. THE

Samily Reading.

6

For the Christian Messenger. A Hcme Missionary Hymn. BY THE REV. J. CLARK, NICTAUX:

Eternal God ! before whose throne The angels bow with sacred awe : Thy Son hath made Thy nature known And magnified Thy righteous law.

These hearts of ours adore Thy grace, These lips proclaim Thy lofty praise; With one accord we seek Thy face, And grateful Ebenezers raise.

The cause for which our fathers wrought Is dear to us, and dear to Thee, In all things they Thy glory sought, And we like them would faithful be:

For work performed, for help bestowed For souls redeemed, what thanks are due! Lord ! make each church Thine own abode,

And every member staunch and true.

To send Thy truth through all the land, Give men and means, U Lord! we pray;

And may we see, on every hand, Thy kingdom grow from day to day.

Go forth with power ; let young and old Thy triumphs sing, Thy glory see; And crown with blessings manifold The work Thy children do for Thee.

sleep.

prolonged to a late hour; and at five warm hand. As she proceeded along o'clock next morning everybody was the streets which were lined with shops, busy helping the bride to pack up. the incessant cry of the shopkeepers Everybody thought of everything so standing at their doors, 'What do you well, that there was very little left for lack? what do you lack?' greeted her her to think of; but she did think of on every side. The vehicles were of one thing. When Margery set out two classes, as I have before observed for her new home in London, the book - waggons and litters, the litters being went too. the carriages of the fourteenth century;

The journey to London from the but the waggons were by far the most North was in those days a long and numerous. Occasionally, a lady of wearisome one. There were no vehi- rank would ride past in her litter, cles but litters and waggons. Margery drawn by horses whose trappings swept travelled part of the way in a litter, the ground; or a knight, followed by and part on a pillion behind her bridea crowd of retainers, would prance by groom, who rode on horseback the on his high-mettled charger. Margery whole way. He had with him a reguspent the happiest day which she had lar army of retainers, besides sundry passed since her marriage, in wandering maidens for the Lady Marnell, at the about London, and satisfying her girlish head of whom was Alice Jordan, the curiosity concerning every place of unlucky girl who, at our first visit to which she had ever heard. Lovell Tower, was reprimanded for Lord Marnell frowned when Margleaving out the onions in the blanchery confessed, on her return, that she porre. Margery had persuaded her had been out to see London. It was mother to resign to her for a personal not fit, he said, that she should go out attendant this often clumsy and foron foot: ladies of rank were not getful, but really well-meaning girl. expected to walk; she ought to have It was a Friday evening when they ordered out her litter, with a due arrived in London; and Margery was attendance of retainers. much too tired to think of doing any. But, my lord,' said Margery very thing but rest her wearied head in naturally, 'an't please you, I could not see so well in a litter.'

As early as four o'clock the next Lord Marnell's displcased lips relaxed into a laugh, for he was amused morning, she was roused by London cries from a happy dream of Lovell at her simplicity; but he repeated Tower. 'Quinces! sweet quinces 1 that he begged she would remember, ripe quinces !" 'Any kitchen-stuff, now that she had seen, that she was no not a noble man and a goodly 2' 'I know not,' answered Margery, heart and soul. still in a troubled voice. 'There is a words, but it troubleth me.'

> for his kindness in showing and explainturned to her supervision of Alice.

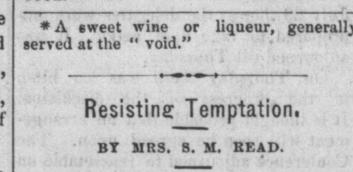

of Kennington, Lord Marnell's sister, to find in her a lady so little resembling the interview, took up his little Queen her country-formed idea of a nun. She in his arms, and carried her out of wore indeed, the costume of her order; the room. Margery had, indeed, no serge or camlet, was black velvet; her for the young Queen was educated at trontlet and barb were elaborately Windsor and very rarely visited London. embroidered; her long gloves§ were of white Spanish leather, delicately perfumed, and adorned with needle-work none in her own sphere with whom she in coloured silks; she wore nearly as many rings as would have stocked a small jeweller's shop, and from her book.

girdle, set with the finest gems, were suspended a pomander, richly worked in gold and enamel, a large silver seal, and a rosary, made of amethyst beads. holding a crucifix, the materials of which were alabaster and gold.

In those palmy days of Romanism in England, nuns were by no means so strictly secluded as now. They were present at all manner of festivities the higher class travelled about the country very much as they chose, and all of them, while retaining the peculiar shape and colours of the prescribed monastic costume, contrived to spend a fortune on the accessories and details of their dress. The Prioress of Kennington, as I have just described her, is a specimen of nearly all the

'Why so?' asked Lord Marnell, of-something to love and live for. A looking down from his altitude upon the little golden-haired baby, which became, ter were church members, but they slight frail figure at his side. 'Is he so far as anything in this world could were very worldly Christians. There become so, the light and joy of her was no family altar; no blessing asked thing in his face for which I find not its true worth the show and tinsel of it no harm to play cards for amusement. London life. She never appeared and a little dancing in their parlor did . Look not on him, then,' said he, again at Court but once, to pay her not disturb the conscience of either of drawing her away. She thanked him respects to the new Queen, who them. received her very cordially, seated on ing the glittering scene to her, and re- a throne by her husband. The small the sophistry of their arguments in Queen of eight 'hoped she was quite favor of their acts. This, with the A few days after this, the Prioress well, and thought that England was a laugh of the bired men, nearly turned very fine country.' The king spoke to | him from the right. He found himself came in her litter to see her young her as kindly as before, offered her sister-in-law. Margery was surprised | ipocras* and spices, and on the close of but her dress, instead of being common opportunity to visit the Court again ; And Lady Marnell, tired of the hollow glitter of high life, and finding few or could complacently associate, went back with fresh zest to her baby and the

'O Mother, Richard has an invitation to go home with Charles Marble, and stay six weeks. Isn't it splendid? Charles says they will go fishing and hunting, and it will be just like a picnic six weeks long instead of a day. One day in the country does him so much good, I feel sure that so long a time will make him quite strong, like the other boys.'

AUGUST 6, 1884.

Mr. Marble and his wife and daughat table; home-made wine and cider Margery soon learned to value at were common beverages ; they thought

> Richard could not quite see through questioning if he had not better conform a little to their ways while visiting them. Then he remembered what his pastor had said in a sermon : " Don't venture too near the edge of a precipice." It there was danger of these things leading to the brink of a precipice, he would ·let them alone; and he was sure there was danger, for there were many examples in proof of it.

> Richard's consistent Christian life was the means of leading Charles to feel that there was a reality in religion, and he was led to seek for himself the Pearl of great price. A revival of great power followed, and it was a genuine revival. The new converts, and those who were reclaimed from a cold and back slidden state, sought diligently to 'add to their faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance ; and to temperance, patience ; and to patience, goodliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness.' Surely brotherly kindness would not lay a stumbling-block in any one's way.

SAVE G families c in the for and cake hens. M been to] kept in s which do posit pie everythin again ret The cag cast any ently that yard. 1 an inhe every ar back do maraudi that our accumul potato, of bread that car a pan w flour, an pestle, poured until it pan is t can eat Every] is cut in kernel fond of pounde that a withou is usele gristle, As the eat suc rough it, they of garl water Hens a pieces bones crop W food is rial.

AUG

FAR

MISTRESS MARGERY: A TALE OF THE LOLLARDS.

BY EMILY SARAH HOLT, Author of "Sister Rose," "Ashcliffe Hall," etc.

CHAPTER IV.

LIFE IN LONDON.

"When we cam' in by Glasgow toun, We were a comely sicht to see,-My luve was clad in velvet black And I mysel' in cramoisie." -Old Ballad.

A forthight after the events recorded seriously dissatisfied with the narrow in the last chapter, Lovell Tower was in the confusion of great preparations and spared no comment on these points for the approaching wedling. Friar Andrew was despatched to York fair her toilette. Having dressed, Margery to purchase twenty yards of scarlet passed into an antechamber, close to cloth, fourteen yards of tawny satin, her bedroom, where breakfast was eight of purple satin, and the same served. This repast consisted of number of blue cloth of silver, with pitcher of new milk, another pitcher of jewels and rich furs. All was cutting- wine, a dish of poached eggs, a out and fitting-on, with discussions tremendous bunch of water-cress, a about trimmings, quintises, and headlarge loaf of bread, and marchpanesdresses. Richard Pynson was sent a sweet cake not unlike the modern macaroon. Breakfast over, Margery hither and thither on errands. Sir Geoffrey himself superintended the put on her hood, and taking Alice with purchase of a new pillion, and ordered her, she sallied forth on an expedition to examine the neighbourhood of her it to be covered with green velvet. new home. One of Lord Marnell's Lord Marnell, who did not often come men-servants followed at a short disto Lovell Tower himself, sent over trusty messenger ever day to inquire if tance, wearing a rapier, to defend his mistress in case of any assault being Mistress Margery had rested well and was merry. From the latter condition made upon her. she was very far. At length the preparations were completed; and on the country, and in a quiet and secluded a very splendid summer day, when the position, being pleasantly situated in birds were singing their most joyous Fleet Street. Green fields lay between melodies, Margery Lovell was married. the two cities of London and Westminister. There was only one bridge in Bostock Church, to Sir Ralph across the river, that silver Thames, Marnell of Lymington, Knight of the which ran, so clear and limpid, through Garter. The bride was attired in blue the undulating meadows; and the cloth of silver, trimmed with miniver; and her hair, as was then the custom | bridge was entirely built over, a covered at weddings, was not confined by any way passing under the houses for head-dress, but flowed down her back, wheeled vehicles. Far to the right long and straight. The bridegroom was dressed in cramoise - crimson velvet-richly trimmed with bullion, and wore three long waving plumes in his cap, as well as a streamer of gold lacee. If any one who may read these pages should inquire why Margery chose blue for her wedding-dress, I may answer that Margery would have been greatly astonished if any one had recommended white. White at this period was not only a mourning colour, but mourning of the very deepest character. No pains were spared to make this a merry wedding, and yet it certainly could not be called a joyous one. All the inhabitants of Lovell Tower knew well that the bride was very far from happy; Sir Geoffrey and Dame Lovell were naturally sorry to lose their only child; Friar Andrew mourned over his favourite and his kettle of furmety; while Richard Pynson had his own allude further in this place.

have you, maids?' 'Cakes and ale ! longer plain Mistress Margery Lovell, cakes and ale !' . Cherry ripe ! cherry | but Baroness Marnell of Lymington, ripe !' ' Come buy, pretty maids, come and would behave accordingly.' Marbuy ! with an undercurrent of the long gery sighed at this curtailment of her rhymed cry of the hawker of haber- liberty, and withdrew to see where dashery, of which Shakespeare has Alice was putting her dresses. As it was approaching evening Lord given us a specimen, as regards the English version---Marnell's voice called her down-stairs. 'If thou wilt see a sight, Madge,' " Lawn, as white as driven snow ;

Cyprus, black as e're was crow," &c. he said, good-naturedly, as she entered, Margery lay still, and listened in 'come quickly, and one will gladden silence to all these new sounds. At thine eyes which never sawest thou before. The King rideth presently length she rose and dressed herself, with the assistance of Alice, who was from the Savoy to the Tower.'

Margery ran to the window, and saw streets and queer smells of the town, a number of horses, decked, as well as their riders, in all the colours of the while assisting her young mistress at rainbow, coming up the street, from the stately Savoy Palace, which stood, surrounded by green fields, in what is now the Strand.

> . Which is the King's Grace, I pray you ?' asked she eagerly.

'He weareth a plain black hood and a red gown,' answered her husband. He rideth a white horse, and hath a with ostrich feathers in gold.'

'What !' said Margery, in surprise that little, fair, goodly man, with the The duchess honoured her with golden frontlet to his horse ?'

The tall, comely man who rideth behind him, on yon brown horse, and who variety of savage. The ladies in waithath eyes like to an eagle, is the Dake ing examined and questioned her with of Lancaster. 'John of Gaunt,' the born at Ghent, in Flanders.'

you not with asking?' said Margery impression. rather timidly.

'In no wise,' answered he. ' Mostly brought home a new queen, the Princess lords and noble gentlemen, of whom Isabelle of France, who had attained thou mayest perchance have heard. the mature age of eight years. Margery The Earl of Surrey is he in the green watched the little Queen make her coat, with a red plume. The Earl of entrance into London. She was Northumberland hath a blue coat, broid- decked out with jewels, of which she ered with gold, and a footcloth of the brought a great quantity over with same. Yon dark, proud-looking man her, and fresh ones were presented to in scarlet, on the roan horse, is the her at every place where she halted. Dake of Exeter,* brother to the King's Alice, with round eyes, declared that 'the Queen's Grace's jewels must be Grace by my Lady Princess his mother worth a King's ransom-and would who was wed afore she wedded the not your good Ladyship wish to have Prince, whose soul God rest! Ah! and here cometh my Lord of Hereford, the like?' Harry of Bolingbroke,† the Duke of Margery shook her head. Lancaster's only son and heir-and a "The only jewels that be worth son and heir who were worse than having, good Alice,' said she, ' be gems of the heart, such like as meekness; none, if report tell truth,' added Lord Marnell in a lower tone. * Seest thou, obedience and charity. And in truth, if I were the chooser, there be many Madge, yon passing tall man, with black hair, arrayed in pink cloth of things that I would have afore jewels But much good do they the Queen's silver?'t Grace, poor child ! and I pray God "I see him well, I thank your good she rest not content with gauds of this Lordship, was Margery's answer; but earth.'

authorities of her day. This handsomely-dressed lady wa stiff and stately in her manner, and uttered, with the proudest mien, words expressive only of the most abject humility. 'If her fair sister would come and see her at her poor house at Kennington, she would be right glad of so great honour.' Margery replied courteously, but she had no desire to see much of the Prioress.

prioressess and other conventual

Lord Marnell took his wife to Court. and presented her to the King-the Queen was dead-and the Duchess of scarlet footcloth, all powdered over Gloucester, This aunt. The King spoke to Margery very kindly, and won her good opinion by so doing. haughty stare, and then ' supposed she " The very same,' said Lord Marnell. | came from the North ?' in a tone which indicated that she considered her more curiosity than civility; and folk call him, by reason that he was Margery's visit to Court left upon her mind, with the single exception of King . And who be the rest, if I weary Richard's kindness, a most unpleasant

In the winter of 1396, King Richard

Then followed an earnest talk between Hattie Seaver and her mother in regard to ways and means.

Life's burdens rested heavily upon this family, but there was so much mutual love that they hardly seemed to realize it. They all seemed to be ever thinking of ways by which they could help one another. The mother said that she went out so little she could do without a new bonnet and shawl that she had been thinking of getting, and Hattie would make over for herself an old black silk that had been her grandmother's, and give the money which she had been saving for a new suit. Alfred, a boy of seven, would give a dollar which he had earned by running of errands ; and little Mary, who was not quite five, hearing the talk, and judging that there was some plan for self-denial going on, put up her little foot towards her mother, with her stocking showing through the toes of her worn shoes, and said, in her sweet way ' I can do without any new shoes.'

When Richard came in and was told that he had better accept the kind invi tation of his friend, it was some time before he could decide to do so. The hope of gaining strength and being able to do more for the dear ones in the future, at length prevailed.

you first turn away from Him.'

In a new suit of well-fitting clothes Richard stepped aboard the cars with his friend, the morning after the close of the summer term of school. At the close of the day he was nearly two hunfind nothing that was suitable that I dred miles away from his home in the could possibly spare; then I began great city, waiting at a small station looking over the children's things, but for the carriage that soon would be there to take them to Mr. Marble's, for could find nothing that the poor dears could be deprived of; so I went to bed they were expected. They had not long to wait. It was a beautiful day with a heavy heart, and lay a long time thinking of the destitution of the in June, and the journey all the way was delightful. Richard was hardly poor heathen, and how much better off conscious of feeling weary at all, and, I was. had he been so, the kind welcome which · I got to thinking over my little stock he received from the father and mother again. There was nothing I could put of Charles would have driven such into the box except one brown towel. feelings all away. ' Next day I got my towels, picked Richard was a member of a church, out the best one, and when it was aland when his pastor knew he was going most dark, put on my bonnet, went to away, he said : church, slipped my towel into the box, ' Now, Richard, don't leave your reand came thinking that the Lord knew ligion behind. Take some time every that I had done what I could. day to read in your Bible and pray.

The Brown Towel,

. They must be very poor who have nothing to give,' said Mrs. Jarvis, as she deposited a pair of beautiful English blankets in a box that was being filled by the ladies of the church to be sent to the poor.

"And now, ladies, as you are nearly through, I would like to tell you an incident in my history ; I was once very poor.

"You once very poor ?' said a lady." A 'Yes; I was once very poor. There came to our village a missionary to deliver a lecture. I felt very desirous to go; but having no decent apparel to wear I was often deprived of going to church, although I was a member.

'I waited until it was late, and then slipped in and took a seat behind the door.

'I listened with streaming eyes to the missionary's account of the destitution and darkness in heathen lands, Poor as I was I felt it to be a great privilege to live in a Christian land and to be able to read the Bible.

'It was proposed by our pastor that the congregation should fill a box and send it out with the missionary on his

'Oh ! thought I, how I would like to send something. When I returned home my poor children were still sleeping soundly and my disconsolate husband waiting my return, for he had been out of employment for some time. After he had gone to bed I went to looking over my clothes, but I could follow water shrinl The large tive v amou albun point as to tritiv ous. is lar and a palat the t

WB

cal che

Agrica

of and

tivate

that i

or the

ting g

most tively

not l AI that of sh the l noth

nam

Whe

some

grain

thing

give

grov

will

whe

shee

ing

it is

do

IS G

pera

We

ont

driv

mu

attı

ofte

the

hou

im

wh

to

Ev

hat

an

gei By

Tower, and all the neighbours were in a gold network, and emitting a invited to it. The festivities were pleasant fragrance when carried in the rose the magnificent Palace of Westminister, a relic of the saxon kings ; and behind it the grand old Abbey, and the strong, frowning Sanctuary while to the left glittered the walls and turrets of the White Tower, the town residence of royalty. Margery however, could not see the whole of this as she stepped out of her house. What first met her eyes were the more detailed and less pleasant features of the scene. There were no cause ways ; the streets, as a rule, would just allow of the progress of one vehicle, though

Lord Marnell's house was very near a few of the principal ones would permit the passage of two: and the pavements consisted of huge stones, not remarkable either for evenness or smoothness. A channel ran down the middle of the street, into which every housewife emptied her slops from the window, and along which dirty water, sewerage, straw, drowned rats, and mud, floated in profuse and odoriferous private sorrow, to which I need not melee. Margery found it desirable to make considerable use of her pomander, The bridal feast was held at Lovell a ball of various mixed drugs inclosed she suddenly shivered as she spoke. 'Art thou cold, Madge, by the casement? Shall I close the lattice?' 'I am not cold, good my Lord, I thank you,' said Margery in a different tone; 'but I like not to look upon that man.'

*Sir John Holland. †Afterwards Henry 1v. These descriptions are taken from the invaluable illustrations in Creton's Historie Before that they were rarely used except du Roy Richart Deux, Harl. MS. 1319. when the wearer carried a falcon on the Creton was a contemporary and personal wrist. friend of King Richard.

Before that winter was over, one thing, worth more than the Queen's jewels in her eyes, was bestowed upon Margery. Something to take care

It was well for Richard that he had "The frontlet and barb were pieces of white linen, the former worn over the learned where to look for strength in the forehead, and the latter over the chin. hour of temptation. There were many §Gloves were just becoming fashionable in the fourteenth century for common wear. things to enjoy in this beautiful home. and there were also many strong temptations that it required a good deal of moral courage to resist.

'And now, ladies, let me tell you it Your soul cannot prosper without propwas not long after that before my huser food any more than your body. The band got into a good situation; and Lord will keep you if you will let Him. prosperity has followed us ever since. He will not turn away from you unless So I date back my prosperity to this incident of the brown towel."

Her story was done and as the carriage was waiting at the door she took her departure, leaving us all mute with surprise that one so rich and generous had been trained to give amid poverty .- Christian Woman.

TElenor Bohun.