His mistress has and he can tell his mistress when the telephone bell rings, and is altogether a delightful dog. He has been taugut to beg for things, and him upstairs to get her slippers. He came down presently with one, and she sent him back for the other, but again he returned without it. He was sent back, and this time he stayed so long that his mistress went upstairs to see what was keeping him. A heavy satchel had fallen upon the slipper, and the little dog, after trying in vain to move it, sat on his hind legs, with his little paws raised in supplication, hoping that he might persuade the satchel to get off the slipper. He probably was convinced that his prayer was efficacious when his mistress lifted the hin-
