THE MAGAZINES.

The Methodist Magazine for July begins its sixtieth volume. It is a special patriotic number containing seven illustrated articles on Canada and its progress. These range from "Louisbourg, Cape Breton," to the far Yukon. The Canadian articles are all good, and there are diagrams showing the wonderful development of the Dominion. In addition are articles on "Methodist Union," "Current Topics and Events," and patriotic poems, with handsome illustrated cover. Toronto: William Briggs. $2 a year; $1 for six months.

A new and attractive cover brightens the appearance of The Missionary Review of the World for July, nor are the contents less pleasing. "The Past and Present in the Philippines is very forcibly contrasted. The editor-in-chief calls for "A New Missionary Crusade," which will appeal forcefully to all interested in missionary progress. There are timely articles on Japan and "The Russian Missionary in Japan." One of the most important contributions to this issue is the story of the Central Presbyterian Church of New York and its missionary work—"A Church That Supports Two Stations" and a dozen missionaries. There are numerous illustrations in the Review and other valuable features. Published monthly by Funk & Wagnalls Company, 44-60 East 23d Street, cor. 4th Avenue, New York. $2.50 a year.

In the Review of Reviews for July, the feature of chief interest is the sketch of "Theodore Roosevelt as a Presidential Candidate," contributed by a delegate to the National Republican Convention. This writer pays his respects to various elements in the two great parties in a series of pungent characterizations that make excellent reading in this rather quiet opening month of the campaign. In this connection, the Review publishes the principal parts of ex-Secretary Root's masterly convention speech on the Republican party's record for the past four years.

As piquant a series of travel sketches as magazine readers have enjoyed for many a day is that appearing in Longman's Magazine over the name of Louisa Jebb. Apparently with but one companion, an Englishwoman like herself, this alert and inquisitive traveler is touring in regions none too safe for armed men, and her description of "That Unblessed Land, Mesopotamia" is full of the sprightly energy which characterizes its writer. The article is reprinted in The Living Age for July 2.
