FAST TRAINS.—The Great Western Railway, England, has established a very fast train service between London and Plymouth, a distance of 240 miles. The train does not stop at intermediate stations, the average speed being very nearly 56 miles an hour. It is the longest non-stop railway run in the world. Recently a mail train was run on this road in three hours forty-six minutes, the last 36 miles at the rate of 79 miles an hour. A train between Glasgow and London ran 66 miles an hour on a few occasions. There is a general movement towards increased speed on British railways.
