On Thursday the House went into Committee on a Bill, which had for its object to prevent the erection of any other public buildings nea the present Jail and Court House at Woodstock There was some objection to the passing of the Bill, the rule not having been complied with, requiring that all those of a local nature should be read in Session. But it came out in debate that the assessment for the purpose referred to had been made just previous to the Grand Jury being dismissed, and so late in the sessions

The present site of the court house and jail was very properly condemned, by those gentlemen who had seen the place; and it is desirable to prevent the erection of any other public building so distant from the village and remote from the business part of the County.
