Top Hat Broadcast Sets Precedent

Repeated tests and an actual broadcast have convinced engineers of the National Broadcasting Company that the new micro-wave transmitter—so tiny that it can be contained in the top of a silk hat—is the latest scientific addition to the science of radio broadcasting. The broadcasting test of the "top hat transmitter" was made on Easter Sunday. George Hicks, of the NBC announcers' staff, put on the silk hat containing the transmitter and strolled along Manhattan's fashionable thoroughfares as he broadcast to the networks a description of the New York Easter parade. Power for the "top hat transmitter" comes from batteries contained in a wide leather belt that the announcer wears. A wire from the batteries—tiny dry cells especially designed for the transmitter—connects with the mechanism in the top of the hat. Another wire is connected with the small microphone which the announcer carries in his hand. The program goes out over the slender metal antenna atop the hat, and is picked up by a mobile unit and relayed to the NBC networks on more powerful waves.

Lochiel also stated that the National Trust, which had secured the site of the Massacre of Glencoe for all time, were at present negotiating regarding the erection at Culloden, to see if some solution could be arrived at.

 may be forged at the same temperature.

Science has provided ovens which heat metal to a precise temperature and maintain it there; these smiths know the temperature by the particular shade of the heated metal. For one metal a blood-red heat is sufficient; another must be "white" hot, and so forth.

Horses may eventually be banished entirely from London, but even then there will be no reason why the blacksmith should also disappear from town.

The Culloden Moor Is To Be Freed Of All Gasoline Pumps

 Major the Hon. A. H. Fraser, Moniack Castle, a descendant of Simon, Lord Lovat, another Culloden Chief, said there were as many Scots buried in the English field.

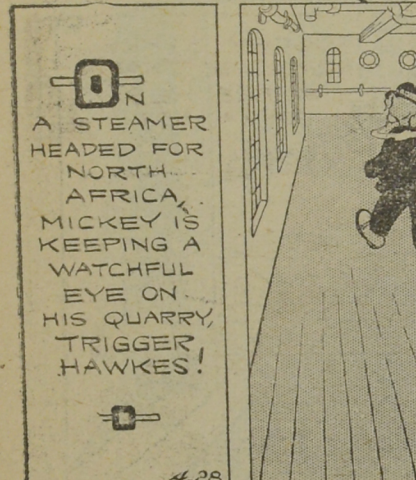

Alexander Munro, Leanach, the Vice-Convenor of the County, and superior of the ground, said he had feued it at a nominal rent for a petrol filling station. Thousands of cars visited Culloden during the summer season, and there was a great demand for petrol. In his view the pumps would be of great benefit. He had laid down that the erection must not be near the stone marking the grave of the English. There had been some misunderstanding regarding permission having already been granted.

Lochiel's contention that the pumps contravened the Ribbon
