a woman, by due attention to dress, hav the prove her natural attractions, or obviate the disadvantages with which she was born. And that it is her duty to do this, whether she be that it is her duty to do this, whether she be that it is her duty to do this, which is more than a well or ill favored, is something more than a maxim of mere worldliness. To endeavour to the ntmost to please those with whom we Nov 17—chron. maxim of mere worldliness. To endeavour to the utmost to please those with whom we live is unquestionably a duty. Such habitual efforts to please constitute benevolence, and not of the lowest order. If we do not love,— and that of which we work the whom we do not love,— and that of which we work the whom we do not love,— nearest to us, those whom we covery day, how shall we seek to please Him whom we have nearest seen.

Benevolence of this, as of every other kind, may run into excess. Our vices tried closely on the heels of our virtues. Indeed, there are few vices which are not virtues in excess.—It is no argument against the practice of any domestic or social amenity that it is liable to abuse. We admit at once, in the present imstance, that it is only good in moderation.— Overditessing in any sense,—whether with reference to an undue amount of time, or of money expended upon it, is so obviously wrong, that it is mere waste of time to enum. wrong, that it is mere waste of time to enun-ciate the common place. We need not be told that dress is a snare. It has lured women e'er now to destruction. But many a house-hold wreck has been occasioned by the rocks which lie out in the opposite direction. wrong, that it is more waste of time to enunwhich lie out in the opposite direction. Many a home has been made miserable— many a domestic tie has been broken by a habitual disregard of "trifles." We use the word of common acceptance with people who are pleased to take what they call high ground, and to walk with their heads in ribbons, crush-ing earth's fairest flowers under foot. But it is Star," "Mie Mae," and others, hard to say what, in the daily and hourly in-tercourse of domestic life is a triffe. The pro-verb, one of the best and truest ever coined, which sayeth, "Take care of your pence, and pounds will take care of themselves," has an application beyond the reign of finance. Take care of these trifles, these pence, these minute fragments of domestic charity, and the great sum total of love and happiness will take care of itself. There are women, severely virtuous, who argue that the love which is in any way dependent upon such accidents as the handiwork of the dress-maker, the milliner, and the shoemaker, is of very little worth. They know

We are indebted to a Roman Catholic con- that there are better things than dress, and La temporary for some insight into the Beligious qualities more estimable than skill in attiring state of Piedmont and Sardinia. For example, with reference to the press, our contemple, with reference to the press, our contem-porary, writing from Turin, reports that "the periodical literature which has risen into such extraordinary activity since 1848, and m some cases conducted with talent, constitutes a re-markable sign of the times in Piedmont, and its agency is vast." They have their cheap "dailies," which are "hawked about" and "dailies," which are "hawked about" and "dailies," which are "hawked about" and a deficit at the state of the s

Acsa, to be found in every to con-cafe, and in most vexatious vicinity to con-vents and churches. And there is valid reason for his regrets and misgivings. The "systematic and virulent attacks of these journals against the clergy attacks of these journals against the clergy and the Church"—these are the cause of his grief. And these attacks continue (to our shame be it spoken), "scarcely interrupted even by the great questions of European po-litics." For instance, the Unione designates the prelates of Piedmont as "prond, ostenta-tions, litigious, and avarieions." The Gazette der Popolo serves as the Charivari of Pied-mont, inasmuch as it "produces every day some sally of malicious humor, or anecdote to some sally of malicious humor, or anecdote to the discredit of the priests! The following specimen of its spirit is given :---" What re-mains to be done to chase away the Croat, the King af Pare and King Banka ?. The following that is the time of choosing, he fancies to be, person-ally attractive in the object of his choice. It King of Rome, and King Bomba!" The Fis-chietto calls to its aid "the vulgarest carica-tures" in dealing with the same cause. The Divitto has recently encountered no less than a woman to his hearth because she is a philoa bishop, having written against the Bishop of Novara, on account of his Pastoral by con-demning the Convent Suppression Bill. The Opinione, a more respectable paper, is re-presented as being poculiarly dangerous. It provides the suppression bill the armonful and the second and the second seco

To Professor Holloway, Sir —I feel a pleasure and a pride in bearing witness to the wonderful benefit I have derived by the use of your inestimable Ointment and Pills. For eight years I suffered unceasingly from attacks of erysipelas; large purple blotches came all over my body; in addition to the un-pleasant feeling of itching and burning, which affected me both night and day, rendering life a masery to me, as well as to all around,—so se-yere was the attack.
