The Two Angels.

LITTLE CARL lay dangerously ill. The night lamp burned upon the table, but the fever of the boy burned more fiercely. On his cheeks were implanted dark red roses...

the angels: "but on some future day we shall see thee again, then thou shalt go with us."

Thereupon the two angels rose, and ascended a golden ladder which carried them up high as upon the golden rays of the sun. With mournful looks Carl saw them disappear above the clouds...

Many years had passed away, when a man lay upon his death bed, far away in China. His hair had not yet turned white, his strength was great and his word mighty...

As the evening approached, he prayed once more, for his eye was already declining with the setting sun. He slumbered again. On a sudden the room brightened as from the lustre of the noon-day sun...
