Sir John Burgoyne left the camp on the 21st, and proceeded to Kamicsch, where he took a passage by the mail steamer, on his way to England. All kinds of opinions and acts have been attributed to Sir John while he was here superintending the earlier operations of the siege, but no one has ever denied the entire devotion and zeal which the vectoran General displayed in the prosecution of the works so are as he could control them. If his manner exhibited that stoical apathy and indifference which distinguished the few remaining disciples of "the Great Duke," his activity and personal energy were beyond his years.
