DISEASED LUNGS

CURED BY TAKING

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

"I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs, and I did what is often done in such cases, neglected it. I then consulted a doctor, who found, on examining me, that the upper part of the left lung was badly affected. The medicines he gave me did not seem to do any good, and I determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking a few doses my trouble was relieved, and before I had finished the bottle I was cured."

A WAR WITH LABOR.

The remark of Henry A. Powell, that the men in the railway shops were paid too high wages, is one that fixes his place for all time in the ceaseless agitation for the rights of labor. Every man who eats his bread in the sweat of his face will do himself and his family no more than justice by remembering this Saturday next.

DIRECT INSULT TO CATHOLICS.

At a political meeting a few nights ago Powell had the gall to say, his religious views were so nearly like the Catholics that he was often taunted with being a Catholic.

As Powell is an openly avowed infidel, and neither believes in the existence of God, Heaven, Hell, or hereafter, Powell's remark is not very complimentary to the Catholic Church or any other religious institution. ONE PRESENT.

WINE GUZZLING.

In the Times of March 11th the Toole-Powell combination gave a list of expenditures made by H. T. Stevens to account for the disappearance of cash that had been stolen from him. One of the items was amount paid for liquors, being presumably a guess at the value of certain liquors that Mr. Stevens ordered for the club, so called,—really a gambling den—and in the use of which he had no share. Our recollection is that Mr. Stevens was never paid for these dry goods, and so the loss and the additional punishment which the Times rascals seek to inflict, will make together a pretty severe penalty for a violation of the command; touch not, taste not, handle not, buy not, sell not, give not, etc., etc.

T. Carey Toole, J. Sutton Boyd and a few others, the writer was informed in March last, had a gambling and drinking den in Dunlap's building, in the lower end of the city, with an entrance at the rear, and fitted up in first-class style, with carpets, lounges, dice, billiard and card tables, and liquors of the best. It was here all the plans were formulated for the election of rulers for the city the last four years. It was here plans were arranged for carrying the elections for the local legislature. It was here the elections for the Commons were decided on. It was here, probably, the whiskey and other liquors, amounting to $200 charged by T. W. Bell to Stevens & Co., as stated in the Times March 11, 1895, were used, and it was no doubt here that the account books of H. T. Stevens were kept during the weeks they were absent from the office from which they were stolen. Toole and Boyd took the liberty to order under the name of Stevens & Co., and did so without deeming it necessary to consult their principal, whose interest in the matter consisted simply of the abuse he might get in consequence thereof. It might be well for business men, who have trusted clerks, to ponder these thoughts, and for all good citizens, even the ministers, to awake to a sense of the terrible possibilities connected with the tolerance of such dens of infamy. If the financial destruction of the writer awakens the good people to a tremendous existing evil, it will not be without some attendant good.

A PERSONAL APPEAL.

I do not think I do wrong, regardless of politics, in saying that H. A. Powell who asks the electors for support; grievously wronged me, as all acquainted with the facts, stated elsewhere, are aware. He might not equally wrong the electors, if they like myself, placed confidence in him, (though his record in local politics would indicate that he might) but it is my duty to say that he cannot be trusted. He called to see me in a friendly way, was told as a friend of the business difficulties arising from Toole's defalcation and Boyds' participation, was told of my purpose to raise money and how I proposed to raise it, dissuaded me from further effort by saying he could readily and easily get me the money, as came to see the properties offered as security, was driven around the city for this purpose, but never came back, or wrote me a letter, or communicated with me in any way, or answered my letters, until the midnight before the money was wanted. He then called and lied to me. He told me he had interviewed Mr. Charles Fawcett, (a prominent money lender) and that he refused to consider the matter, alleging that new debt were cropping out, etc.

Charles Fawcett told me, within two weeks, that he could have lent the money, that Powell was to see him at a certain time, but failed to do so, and that he did not refuse to lend the money because of the inadequacy of security or for any other reason. In consequence of the late hour at which Powell's failure was announced—a few short hours before the money was required—I was obliged to succumb and the result has been, through the masterly efforts of Masters, aiding Toole and Boyd, that I was thrown penniless upon the street, my property being given away at the smallest price obtainable. People who like this treatment of those who spend every dollar they can get in employing labor and thereby aiding every business interest of the place,—people who like this, we say, should vote for Powell. Those who believe that honesty is useful and should be practised, that business men should be encouraged and not wronged, will vote for Killam.

H. T. STEVENS.

KILLED HERSELF FOR LOVE.

Deserted by the youth she loved, Ida Fleischer committed suicide at her home in New York city, on the second floor of the five story tenement, No. 1,738 Second avenue some time during Sunday night. The girl was an orphan, and for two years had lived in the family of Isidor Sachs, to whose wife she was distantly related. She was a garment finisher, and worked steadily until a few days ago.

The girl became acquainted two years ago with Samuel Goldstein, a trousers maker, who lives in Third street, near avenue B. She was then sixteen years old, he was fifteen, but the girl fell in love with him, and they became engaged to be married. They had quarrels and reconciliations, but about two months ago the boy began avoiding Ida, treating her with marked indifference when she forced herself into his presence.

SAID SHE DID NOT CARE TO LIVE.

This treatment cut the girl. She lost her usual good spirits, became melancholy and was often heard to remark that she did not care to live. So matters stood a week ago last Sunday, when Ida sent Sachs' little girl to Goldstein, imploring him for an interview. Goldstein went to Sachs' house, where he met Ida. She told him that if he did not marry her she would kill herself.

He replied that he was only seventeen years old and too young to marry; that he did not earn enough money to support a wife; that he did not intend to marry for five years, and that he did not think he would marry her, anyhow. Then he left the house without even bidding her goodbye. After he went away the girl was seemingly disconsolate for a time, but during the evening she laughed and sang as if nothing troubled her. For the next two days she left the house in the morning and remained away all day as if at work, but on the third day acknowledged that she had not been at work and had left her place. From that day she became so melancholy that she seemed at times to be insane.

IT WOULD NOT KILL HER.

Once she went to the roof, and after remaining there some time returned down stairs, and remarked that if she jumped from the roof she might not kill herself and would then be taken to prison. She gave articles of clothing to her friends, asking that they be worn at her funeral.

She appeared to be in good spirits last Sunday evening and the family retired at eleven o'clock, leaving her sitting in the dining room.

Sachs arose and opened the door of the bathroom at six o'clock Monday morning. The girl was lying on the floor in her night clothes, while a flood of gas told the story. The gas was turned full on and the window and ventilator were tightly closed. A physician was summoned, and he declared that life had been extinct several hours.

The efforts of the conspirators and thieves of the Times crew to stop the issue of this paper through the election campaign, while Mr. Stevens was temporarily absent from the city, did not wholly succeed, although it did have the effect of preventing an issue for a few days. THE LEADER hopes hereafter to be issued regularly in size and otherwise as at the commencement and under the personal supervision of H. T. Stevens who owes it to the public to expose the rascality of the Toole, Boyd, Sumner, Masters, Powell combination. The safety of every business man in the community will be promoted by the fullest exposure, and we hope it is not immodest or in any way unbecoming in THE LEADER to say that Mr. Stevens is not the kind of man to shirk a duty of this kind.

Those who desire to oblige H. A. Powell with a vote should be careful not to let him know it. The instinct of the man impels him to be treacherous to his friends and to purchase his enemies. There is no longer a doubt of the fact that he offered himself to the Blair administration at a fixed price and that the purchase was declined by the Attorney-General. It is equally the fact, without doubt, that his colleague, to whom he was very largely indebted for his election, had no intimation, NOT THE SLIGHTEST HINT, that such treachery to the people of Westmorland and to himself personally, was contemplated by the man whom said colleague, Mr. Stevens, had, practically, brought out and elected.

The efforts of Senator Wood to aid the election of Powell, by travelling with him and speaking for him, may or may not display great delicacy of taste, but whatever may be conceived to be the course of propriety for the nominee and appointee of the Crown, occupying a position beyond the reach of the people, the attitude of Mr. Wood renders it useful to enquire whether or no he will regard his tenure of the senatorship dependent on the decision of the electors re Powell and Killam. To be entirely logical and consistent, it seems to us that Mr. Powell's defeat, which is quite likely to be announced on Saturday night, should be followed by Mr. Wood's resignation. We humbly hope that this suggestion will not prove to be the combination that opens Mr. Wood's safe because, if it is, one half the advantages anticipated by Wood for his recent elevation, or rather appointment will be irretrievably lost.
