NOTES FROM WHITECHAPEL

What is Going on Among the Lower Strata of Fredericton Society.

WHITECHAPEL,
March 21st, 1896.

This afternoon, while Hannah was holding an At Home at Whitechapel Place, one of the guests, Mrs. Steph. E., of Loch Lomond, (who is at present on a visit to her friend, Mrs. Robt. E., of Beechmont) was seated on the balcony with Mr. John D., when they discovered that the damask drapery of the reception room of Mrs. Lavinia H's residence was on fire. He at once sounded an alarm, which of course broke up the entertainment. Charles H. being present, immediately called out the Lightning Brigade, most of whom were attending the reception. While moving the piano, Mr. Charles H. got his arm badly sprained. By heroic efforts they succeeded in saving a part of the furniture, but several valuable carpets and a magnificent Marble top bed room sett, that took first prize at the Otnabog exhibition, were totally destroyed, along with a front and back parlor suite, which were badly damaged by water and broken in removing. Some very valuable old china and silverware, the property of her grandmother, was also lost. The fire is supposed to have caught from the open fire place where they had thrown a big log on the andirons, before leaving home for the reception.

The veteran Mac, the king of Whitechapel, recently celebrated his 98th birthday, amid loud rejoicing among all his subjects, ending with a grand barbecue and a dance by the coons, until midnight, while the Irish poteen and Schenck beer ran in torrents down as far as the water works.

WAS IT JUSTICE ?

Early one morning in the fall of 187— a young man was walking up King street, St. John; he was respectably clad in his right hand he held a bunch of live fowls, his appearance indicated that he had been a successful patron at some one of the numerous raffles that were nightly in fashion at that period. On reaching the head of King steet, he was halted by— a sergant of police and his men who asked him where he was going, his reply was that he was going home, they next asked him where he got the the chickens or fowls, he promptly told them it was none of their business, "Phat is that" said the sergant begorra I'll show you, come wid me, before I break your head wid me club" he was promptly arrested and appeared before the late justice H. S. G. who charged him with having live fowls in his possession and not giving a satisfactory account of himself to the policemen. He was put back for trial until two o'clock p. m., the morning papers contained an account of the affair at two o'clock he was brought before the justice again, the live fowls being brought into court by the prisoner. The justice enquired if there had been any claimants for the fowls, and on being answered in the negetive, he sentenced the young man to six months in the Provincial Penetentary for having in his possession live fowls stolen from some person or persons unknown. Sent to Jail for Whispering in Church.

In a recent issue the New York Advertiser says:

Ina Crabtree, a nine year-old orphan girl, has been arrested, fined $5.50 and sentenced to ten days in jail for whispering in church. In order to deliver the child up to the jailer it was necessary to drive her twenty-two miles over the country in inclement weather. This did not happen at Salem in the old days when they were burning people at the stake to exorcise the devil and make them good, but it occurred this week near Portsmouth, Ohio. It is said that the child after she has served her sentence in prison 'will be given a better home.' From this distance it does not appear that the child's present home is so much at fault as the atmosphere of the highly enlightened and Christian community in which she lives.
