HOME

(By Fannie Stearns Davis)

Home, to the hills and the rough running water;

Home to the plain folk and cold winds again.

Oh, I am only a gray farm's still daughter,

Spite of my wandering passion and pain.

Home from the city that snares and entralls me;

Home from the bold light and bold weary crowd,

Oh, it's the blown snows and bare field that calls me;

White star and sky dawn and wild, lonely cloud!

Home, to the gray house the pine trees guard, sighing;

Home, to the low door that laughs to my touch.

How should I know till my wings failed me, flying,

Home nest,—my heart's nest,—I loved you so much?
