Joseph of Austria is indefatigable in his application to business. He retires to rest at the hour when life is beginning in Vienna. and at five o'clock, in winter as in summer, the emperor, active, laborious and watchful, is always on foot again. He breakfasts on a cup of coffee placed on his desk, smokes one of the ordinary Viennese cigars while reading his voluminous despatches and remains hard PEOPLES' BANK OF NEW at work till the early family dinner. Enthusiastic sportsman as he is, and devoted to mountain scenery, no wonder he is delighted to hurry away to his favorite hunting grounds in the hills of the Saltzkam-marget. He leaves Vienna in the evening, like a merchant who has finished his business; he crosses the Transee in the night, and arrives at Ischal at five in the morning. There he is to be seen in his blouse, with his great walking-stick, roaming about in the most enchanting district of al his picturesque dominions, or chatting familiarly with the peasants or their children. He is very happy in his marriage. His first meeting with his future empress was romantic. One of her sisters had been destined for the imperial throne. and when Francis Joseph in his hunting dress arrived one evening at his father-inlaw's residence on the Traunsee, he was re- 16 Doz. As he was chatting with the group. he saw an apparition of beauty, with magnificant hair floating over her shoulders, illuminated in the full glow of the sunset, approaching them from a neighboring wood. It was the Princess Elizabeth, the fifth of the sisters. and the emperor from that moment became

A leading medical authority says :-- "Consumption is essentially a disease of degeneration and decay. So it may be inferred that the treatment the most part should be of a sustaining and invigorating character—nutritious food, pure, dry air, with such varied and moderate exercise in it as the strength will bear, the enlivening influence of bright sunshine and agreeable scenery, and cheerful society and occupation, aided by a judicious use of medical tonics and stimulants, are among the means best suited to reatore the defective functions and structures of frames prone to decay." WOMEN IN THE LONDON TELE GRAPH OFFICE.

Eight hundred young women at work, all one room, looking comfortable, most of hem looking pretty, earning fair wages at easy work-work fit for women to do: work which they can sit and rest, and not be weary, with a kitchen at hand and a hot dinner in the middle of the day, with leave absence without stoppage of pay every year, with a doctor for sickness and a pension for old age-for the young women as years roll on will become old-with only eight hours of work, never before 8 o'clock in the morning and never after 8 at night, with female superintendents, and the chance of rising to be superintendent open to each girl. This is a Government office, under Government surveillance, and all this has sprung into existence during the last eight years. The General Post office is in St. Martin's-le-Grand, near St. Pauls' and there are now two great post offices at the same place, facing each other, the elder one having been found altogether insufficient for the purpose required, although when it was first opened, about forty-five years ago, it was supposed to be of her father she inherited about $38,000 absurdly large for any possible requirements which the country could have for such a building. Those who pass from Cheapside into Newgate street, after the lamps have whole top floor of this new building is illuminated. It is here that the 800 young women are at work, and their building is here. for I had known much of the civil service one named had been sent away at some time

AN ASTONISHING FACT .- A large proportion residence. Mr. Lyon's death soon followed, and Mr. Thomas J.
