She clasped her hands on my arms. She laid her cheek on my shoulder;

The tide of her tears fell warm On hands that trembled to hold her, I whispered a pitying word, As the ship moved slowly apart, And the grief of the friendless poured Its choking weight on my heart.

For graves in the evening shade Were green on a far-off hill,

Where the joys of her life were laid With love that had known no chill But however her heart might yearn, We were facing the freshening breeze, And the white wake lengthened astern On the rolling floor of the seas.

She quenched the fire of her tears. Uplifting her meek brave head, "Or dark or bright be the years,

I will take courage," she said; Smoothing back her loose-blowing hair, And her shawl drawing closer the while, So she drank in the strong sea air, And left the old shore with a smile.

Literature.

A proud, stern man was Geoffrey Peyton, and rich withal, in wealth and honors. He had won distinction at the bar and on the bench, and had filled the executive chair of New York State. How deeply his proud heart had suffered, those familiar only with his cold and haughty hearing would have been surprised to know.

Not very early in life he married one whom he had long loved with an ardent devotion, often characteristic of men like him, and of which weaker natures are incapable. In his early struggles with poverty, he had kept his love a secret. He would have suffered his heart to break sooner than have had it whispered he was seeking advancement through an alliance affray, he had the misfortune, in a mowith rich old Ronald Mason's daughter.

But when he could hold up his head with the highest in the land, he no longer hesitated to speak the words he had been so many years waiting to utter, and which Alice Mason had been as many waiting to hear.

A few years of unalloyed felicity followed their marriage. Though proud and stern as ever to the outside world. not the same man was Geoffrey Peyton at home, his wife by his side, and his bright-eyed boy prattling on his knee. There he forgot his pride, save that he felt in those he loved, forgot fame, and ambition, and greatness, and remembered only that he was happy.

Then came a blow which fell none the lighter on the proud man's head because he gave no sign of yielding. Death cross. ed his threshold and took from him first his wife and then his child.

The last of these bereavements was peculiarly distressing. The child went for a walk with his nurse by the riverside, and in a moment of inattention on the part of the nurse, had strayed out of sight. Soon after his hat was found floating on the water. Alarm was given: search was made; the river dragged; but in vain. The child was nowhere to be found. The body, in all likelihood, had been borne out by the tide.

Geoffrey Peyton bore his loss in silence. What his grief was no one knew, for no one was permitted to look upon it, and sympathy he would have resented as an impertinence.

Years sped, and Geoffrey Peyton had become an old man. At his death, his large fortune would descend by law to a distant relative, a young man whose avarice kept him free from all cost'y vices. and who, most vices being costly, enjoyed in consequence, and excellent reputation.

But Mr, Peyton had opinions of his own as to the disposition of his property. Like many men of his caste, he had an aversion to the division of estates; and while not inclined to disinherit his kinsman, of whom he knew nothing but his reputation, which, we have already said. was good, there was one other whose claims he felt it would be unjust to overlook. He had brought up in his house, and in some sort adopted, Gertrude Gray, the orphan daughter of an old friend to whom he had been beholden in his days of struggle, and who had died leaving his only child destitute.

Mr. Peyton's plan, duly set forth in his will, was to settle his property, in equal portions, on Gertrude and his kinsman, provided they married each other in a given period. If either declined the match, the share of the one declining was to go to the other; and if both declined, the whole was given in trust for certain charities.

George Haynes had sought and obtained morning. George Haynes is among the employment of Mr. Peyton as his secre-saved, and has already reached New tary. "Then for her sake desist from a scheme which, if successful, must reduce her to beggary. If you possess a tithe of the unselfishness you profess, you will heed this warning and go your way. I have other plans for Gertrude."

A moments reflection convinced George that harsh as Mr. Peyton's words were, in one respect they were just. It would be selfishness to persist in seeking happiness at the cost of her whom he pretended to in

"I shall leave this place to morrow,' he said, and turned away.

The morning papers announced the loss of a great steamer, bound for San Francisco. Nearly all on board had perished; and among the names of the lost was that of George Haynes. Gertrude Gray swooned when she read it, and Mr. Peyton felt not quite easy in his con-

That evening, as he sat moodily in his study, he was interrupted by a visitor, a woman, whose form, once tall, was bent with age, and whose wrinkled face and wild dark eye had something sinister in

"Pray be seated, and explain the reason of your visit madam," said Mr. Peyton pointing to a chair.

Taking the proffered seat, she remained for a time silent, gazing intently on the face before her. Time had graven deep lines upon it, and sorrow deeper still. As she perused them, a smile of satisfaction, more like a shadow than a mile, flitted over her countenance.

"You had a son once," she said. The lines grew deeper on the face she was studying, and a pained expression

"I too, had a son," she continued—"an only one, as yours was. In a sudden ment of passion, to slay his antagonist, who was quite as blamable as himself. The jury decided it to be murder, but recommended him to mercy. The judge joined in a petition for clemency. My boy's life was in your hands. The law had entrusted you, as the Governor of the State, with the dispensation of mercy, but you had no mercy. You turned aside from my prayers, and my son was left to die a felon's death.

Geoffrey Peyton remembered now the face that had often haunted him since the day it had been turned pleadingly upon him, and vividly recalled the look of anguish it had worn when he spoke the relentless words that crushed hope out of a mother's heart.

"That day," she resumed, "I took an oath to make you feel, if possible, all I then felt. I stole away your child---

"My child !-- is he alive ?" "Listen. I stole away your child, and left you to mourn him as dead. I took him to a distance, and reared him as my own. I bore no malice towards him. only hate you. I brought him up tenderly, educated him as well as my moderate means would allow, and felt thankful that in inflicting punishment on the father, I had been enabled to do it with so little injury to the child."

Before he went, he confided to me the cause of his going; and on reading the announcement of his fate, I resolved that you should feel over again the agony of a parent's bereavement, heightened now by the fierce sting of remorse." "Your story is false ?" he cried, springng up-"a fiendish invention, gotten up to torture me! But I will put you to the proof. #### TESTIMONIALS.

GENTLEMEN.-In reply to your enquiry about your Mowing Machines in this place, we would st year when we recevied your Mowers, we gave them a fair trial with others, before fered them for sale. We used them an hour each in the field with the one team and an exneed driver. We, and others who were present, were convinced that your Mower would do good work, and was not as liable to get out of order as other Machines that are running here We have had some experience in repairing Mowers for the last five years. We have always found that the Wood Mower runs with the least expense; there are not so many bolts and nuts to get out of order. Your Machine has got the best boxing—all brass; the journals are well fitted nd run very smooth; the strains are met with straight lines, and these are features worthy of notice in machinery. In fact we think you have the plainest, simplest, and most substantial Mower running. They are dot only the best, but lowest in price of any of the same quality. We do not hesitate in saying to parties wanting to buy a good Machine, to try one before purchasing and be convinced that you make at home in our own country as good a Mower as can be got in the market. They are not surpassed by any, and should you accidentally break a piece you have n getting it replaced at the Foundry; you are not humbugged by agents, and lose the of a Machine nearly all having time hunting them up and then not find them. The lines we sold last year gave good satisfaction, and the farmers wish you every success so long GENTLEMEN,—The only objection we have to the Machine is this, it is not to the shop for repairs, as often as we would like it, but as that is the kind that suits the farmers, we dare not grumble out aloud.

Yours respectfully,

It is light of draught, cuts heavy and light, standing or lodged rass with perfect success, is easily managed, and very durable. It has never cost me one cent or repairs. It all appears in as good working order as when bought. The absence of bolts and nuts, in consequence of its solid boxing, I consider one of its most important and valuable improvements over other Mowers in our Market, and would most strongly recommend it to the farmers of York County as the Mower to buy.
