The Dairy.
The fact is being generally noticed that the gold medal at the U. S. Food exhibition in New York, and all but one of the prizes for creamery butter were taken by butter made from cream raised by the gravity process, and also that the gold medal and half of the premiums for dairy butter were awarded to butter made by the same process. Vice-President Morton won a gold medal for his Guernsey butter made from gravity cream while, on his butter made from separated cream he got nothing.

A Missouri fruit grower says: "I have associated with fruit-growing the gentle Jersey cow, as fruit growing and the dairy have points of common interest. If I lived farther from a city or distant from a creamery, I might have decided differently; but living close to the city I find that fruit, milk, cream, butter, cottage cheese, etc., when being supplied to a retail trade, are all appreciated by the same people at the same time; that is, each family will order one or all these for the day's consumption, and they seem glad to have them at the same hour and from the same party."

In reply to the question, "What do you think of oats for a milk cow, and what would you mix with them?" Mr. Gilbert of New York replied: "Oats make almost a perfect ration for a cow in milk, but the trouble is, we cannot afford to feed them. They are too expensive. If you are going to feed them mix some peas with them; in winter add some corn meal, especially if a cow has milked down thin or if your stables are cold. The corn meal will furnish the heat which the stable will not, but it is an expensive way to warm up a cold stable; better hire a carpenter and buy lumber and nails."

Prof. Robertson of Canada wrote to the Listowel dairymen's board of trade, according to the Rural Canadian, that he had been successful in devising a new combination of forage crops for silage which he believes will prove of very great service to the dairymen. He has no doubt but that it will enable stock men to save many millions of dollars a year in the annual cost of feeding their cattle. He asks for it a trial and gives the combination as follows: "Sixteen pounds of Indian corn and sixteen pounds of English horse beans, planted together, per acre, mixed with the heads from half an acre of the Mammoth Russian sunflower." These, he assures the dairymen, "will give a most desirable nutritious and economical ration," in the form of silage. Will some of our readers try it next season?

A SUITABLE CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

What Happened From Not Having a Carving Knife.

Dick and Maggie had been married only three months. As is often the case, some of their wedding presents were duplicates, while some other things, just as necessary, were forgotten altogether. The worst of it was, that, as they lived in a village, and the presents were all from dear friends or relatives, they could not exchange them, as we are told they sometimes do in the cities. However, Maggie being a sensible little woman, with a knack of making things do, they had got along very well.

It was the first of December, and Maggie, as she arranged the tea-table, was reviewing mentally, her list of presents for Christmas. It had been such a busy year—first, the endless preparations for the wedding, and since then, the settling to rights and making pretty of her little home—that she had not found the times for much "fancy work," so she would have to buy the most of them.

She knew just what mother and the girls would like—Father, too—in fact, her list was all complete and satisfactory, with the exception of something for Dick. "Last, but not least, oh, no!" she thought to herself with a happy smile. "If he only smoked! To be sure, she was glad he did not," she thought it an untidy, expensive habit, but there were always so many pretty things one could give a smoker.

Here the click of the gate latch interrupted her thoughts, and she flew to open the door.

During the progress of their evening meal, Maggie was so unusually quiet, that Dick finally noticed it, and asked:

"What's up, little woman? Anything gone wrong to-day?"

"No. Why? You seem so quiet."

"Oh, I've been thinking."

"That's nothing new. What about?"

"About Christmas. I can't think of anything to give you; you have everything."

"That's so. Don't give me anything. You have given me yourself; that will do for one while."

"What rubbish!" she said, with a pleased blush. "Any-way, I want to give you something; it would not seem like Christmas if I didn't!"

Well, get something we will both enjoy—something we need about the house. That will do first-rate."

The next day as soon as Maggie had finished washing the dinner dishes, and had tidied the kitchen, she donned her stylish walking suit, and set out for one of the two hardware stores of the village. Not finding anything that suited her rather fastidious taste, she left an order with the proprietor, to be sent to the city and filled. Then, visiting some other stores to complete her list of presents, she turned her face homeward, with a feeling of satisfaction that the problem was solved.

The following week, Maggie invited her mother, Mrs. Ripple, and the girls, Annie and Katie, to spend a long day with her. Pa Ripple was to come home with Dick at noon. It was an occasion when Dick and Maggie felt very anxious that their little establishment should have its "best foot foremost; for, although the family had dropped in singly, time and again, at meal-time, this was their
