Not being an expert ax-woman she missed the shingle and the axe sank into the ground. A terrific report followed, the axe flew in one direction and Miss Jennie in another, while earth, shingles and chips flew in all directions. Miss Brown found herself when she recovered consciousness on the other side of the woodpile, laughing in a hysterical manner. Her arms were blown full of small perforations as if she had been pricked with a thousand needles; while her lower limbs presented the appearance of a small-pox patient just convalescent. A perforation through dress and corset penetrating into her side from which the blood was flowing freely was found by her friends when they returned. The report was heard some half mile off. It would appear as if the explosive were dynamite, but how did it get into the ground? Miss Jennie is around again almost as brisk as ever.—Richibito Review

Sir Charles Tupper was deputed to attend the railway congress at St. Petersburg, but did not go, as he feared the cholera quarantine would detain him longer than he cared to stay and prevent him returning in time to draw his salary.

Of the above number of persons accused, 1,952 have been discharged in 1891, against 1,847 in 1890; this leaves the number of convictions in the Criminal Courts of Canada at 3,964, for the year 1891, or 8.02 per 1,000 inhabitants, against 3,934, for the year 1890, or 8.23 per 1,000 inhabitants. The Russian authorities of Siberia recently seized and confiscated several British Columbia sailing vessels and placed their crews in confinement, claim that Russia had jurisdiction extending one thousand miles from her territory. If this is true it opens up a new phase of the Behring Sea question, and shatters the United States contention that all Russian jurisdiction passed to them when Alaska was purchased. The Canadian government will probably lay the matter before the home authorities.

CORBETT VICTORIOUS

Sullivan Put to Sleep in the 21st Round.

The Particulars of the Fight. The Boston Man Punched and Laughed at by Corbett.

The much talked of fight between J. J. Corbett and John L. Sullivan, took place at the Olympic club, New Orleans, on Wednesday evening and resulted in the defeat of Sullivan. The fight was witnessed by about 9,000 people.

At 9.10 p. m., the men shook hands; the referee called time, and the first round began by Corbett cleverly ducking two blows and dancing around Sullivan. The round ends without a blow being landed.

2nd round—The men close, and Sullivan lands on the nose, while Corbett gets in a vicious right on John's body, a clinch and some sparring. Just as the round ends Corbett lands lightly on Sullivan's stomach.

4th round—Sparring. Sullivan makes a left swing but misses. He rushes and Corbett taps him on the nose. Sullivan lands lightly on Corbett's shoulder, but misses a right hand swing.

5th round—Corbett lands on Sullivan's breast. Sullivan misses another right, and receives two stiff blows; his face is bleeding. Corbett punished the fell blow terribly in this round, landing six vicious blows on his face, nothing but the call of time saving him.

6th round—Sullivan's nose which is cut on the bridge is bleeding, but he has recovered himself and is a little more cautious. A clinch and a break away; Corbett lands on John L's ear and then gets in on his stomach, and gets away again, his cleverness eliciting great applause. He places another on John's nose just before the call of time.

7th round—Sullivan leads with his left and lands lightly on the shoulder, and Corbett again puts his right on "Sul" between the eyes. He then lands on his stomach and face, making John appear a very poor boxer. He places a couple more on the bangle, and succeeds in getting in a right and left that knocks Sullivan against the ropes.

8th round—Sullivan makes a lunge and misses. Corbett nearly closes John's eye with a right hander. A clinch. Corbett lands on the wind viciously, followed by one on the jaw and then the right and left on John's head and another on the stomach.

9th round—John lands lightly on Corbett's head and receives in return one on the mouth. This is followed by a blow on the nose that again shows the color of Sullivan's claret.

11th round—Sullivan comes up strong, leads with his left and clinches. Corbett puts his right on the chin, and rushing lands right and left on the nose. He follows with four more jabs on the nose and lands his left on the stomach just before the round closes.

12th round—Corbett misses a left for the wind but succeeds a little later in getting there. In this round he walked around stopping occasionally to plant a blow whenever the opportunity offered, getting away again very cleverly.

13th round—Sullivan lands on the shoulder, and again on the neck, and is met with Corbett's left on the nose, which follows this up with a heavy one on the jaw. John makes a rush with a swing but is met with a left on the nose.

16th round—John leads and is met by a straight left on the chin. John leads again, but gets Corbett's left and right on the face. Corbett lands his left on the nose, and his right on the wind. Sullivan makes a lunge and misses. Corbett lands another with his left on the chin. Corbett lands twice on the stomach, but misses a terrible right hand swing. He is saving his right; end of round.

18th round—Sparring. Both men cautious. Corbett again puts his left on John's nose, and then the right on John's cheek bone and then the left on the side. Sparring. Corbett lands his left and right in the face, and then the left on the wind. He gets two soakers on Sullivan's jaw as the round ends. There is immense cheering.

20th round—Sparring. A clinch. Corbett rushes John to the ropes, landing three times on his head and stomach. A second later he lands on Sullivan's mouth. Then he missed a hard left handed swing. Corbett lands the left on wind, and the right on the shoulder; then the left on the jaw. Then he rushes John to the ropes, landing four hard blows. Corbett has all the better of the round;

21st round—Sparring. Sullivan's nose and lips are bleeding. Corbett blocks Sullivan's left. Sullivan is very cautious and apparently still strong. Corbett wins. Corbett shakes his hands. Sullivan's attempts to rise were pitiful.

The fight was for a purse of $25,000, offered by the Olympic Club, the championship of the world and $10,000 a side.

Therefore, resolved, That a committee be appointed to issue posters inviting all citizens to join in a search for said lost child, and a day to be named in such notice, and to arrange for train accommodation for such volunteers from Fredericton to Doak Settlement and return on day named, and also to make any other necessary arrangements.

A Little Heroine. Another heroine has been found in lowly life. She is an Irish girl, the daughter of a poor carter in the suburb of North Dublin. One evening in October, 1890, Julia Dignam was preparing to take a walk with a girl friend of her own age, when a scream from the neighborhood of a limekiln near by startled her. Running that way she found her friend wringing her hands and crying out that two boys were smothering in the limekiln. Without an instant's hesitation or a thought of the gathering darkness, for it was then 8 o'clock, this brave girl sprang into the kiln, in the hope of bringing one or the other, if not both, to the surface alive. The younger of the two, a boy of seven years, she dragged first to a place of safety. She then returned for the other, but he was already dead. Her girl friend rushed away shrieking in terror, leaving the little heroine alone. But her shouts for help brought one of her brothers, and between them they brought out the dead boy. It is only recently that a tardy recognition of her bravery has been made. The little Irish girl was summoned to London and to Marlborough House, where the Prince of Wales pinned upon her breast the silver medal of the Grand Priory of the Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, which is a very great honor indeed. The Prince also spoke kindly and in praise of her heroism.
