WORKERS FOR GOOD

Not long ago two rough looking men were standing on a street of one of the large American cities, looking at the Salvation Army marching past with its discordant efforts to bring music out of a harmonica, a drum, a tambourine and a cornet. The two men were in for a good time, and both held as much bad liquor as was convenient. As they watched the parade one of them turned to the other and said: "Well I can break up this procession in about a minute." The other seized him by the arm as he was about to follow his words with an attack on the paraders. "Hold on, Bill," he said "there's a heap sight better people than you in that procession." Bill thought it over till the band had passed, "You're right," he said, "they're a heap sight better'n me." And the attack was not made.

The Salvation Army has fought its way till it has conquered a place in the respect of those farthest from its methods and even from its purpose. It has passed what has been called the "brickbat era" of its existence. The time when it was regarded as fair game for the roughs and the street urchins and a fair target for the wits and cartoonists in the past. The Salvation Army methods were those that brought it prominently before the people. There was no missing the drum, the tambourine, the cymbals, the cornet and the other instruments with which the devout but unpractised band made manifest their zeal for the salvation of themselves and their fellow creatures. Their methods challenged the ridicule of the learned and the roughs. But the army bore insults, injuries, arrests and other annoyances of their work with a patient confidence that it was a part of the difficulties that they were to overcome on their road to salvation.

But gradually men came to know that the rough exterior, the noise and vulgarity, covered a new force for good in the world. They found that the Salvationists were not only intent on the safety of their own souls, but were also relieving misery and working honestly, earnestly and with success to make good men and women of the depraved, the wicked and the lawless. It was seen that the army was not afraid to charge into the depths of wickedness to bring sinners to repentance and to lead an upright life and men found that its methods were adapted to those whom they attempted to help.

The Salvation Army is to-day respected as a force for good in the world. One of the New York journals in commenting on its progress, says: "Many reasons for the success of the Salvation Army can be given, but they can all be condensed in one: It is honestly trying to do a work which the organized churches have largely failed to do. It makes a large and, in the opinion of many, a dangerous use of emotion. Some of its methods seem puerile to intelligent people and others are characterized by vulgarity and bad taste. It is utterly devoid of any intellectual character, and the rank and file of its members not capable of thinking, either deeply or clearly. But in these defects part of its strength lies, for they enable it to direct the whole of its enthusiasm, zeal and earnestness, backed by its effective organization, to the regeneration of the pariahs of society and the church. The people it is trying and so successfully trying, to reach are just the people to be touched by unreasoning emotion and by the bizarre forms of worship which distinguish the Army.

And, besides accomplishing a great deal of good itself, the Salvation Army has re-acted on the churches. It has compelled them to pay some attention to the problems it has set itself to solve, and to cultivate some of that emotional enthusiasm which it has so abnormally developed. The staid Anglican Church has complimented it by organizing a "Church Army" which works on much the same lines. And all the other Christian denominations have, in a measure, caught the spirit that animates it, which after all is merely a crude expression of the spirit of Christ, who came before all else to seek and to save those who are lost."

THE BOSTON FIRE.

How Lives Were Saved by Skillful and Courageous Firemen.

A very destructive fire visited Boston Friday evening of last week, and before it could be got under control over $5,000,000 worth of property had gone up in smoke. The fire started in the Ames building, Lincoln street. The story of the fire as told by Mr. Young, the manager of the Lariat manufacturing company:

"The first we knew of any fire was a puff at the farther end of the room, followed by the screaming of the girls. The room filled with black, bad smelling smoke within a minute, driving everybody to the windows. We hadn't time to look around us even. Every thing had to be dropped, books, overcoats, cases and umbrellas even.

"I saw Miss Erickson, one of our girls, jump from the window before a warning word could be given. Two or three more did likewise, and when we got there we saw people in the street trying to catch them. My son, H. C. Young and F. H. Toby of Thomaston, Me., were with me, having called on business a few moments before. All three of us held somebody from jumping till we could look about us. Toby is a sea captain, and was out on the coping the first thing. He called to us that there was a safe way down by way of a telegraph pole, and we all made our way along the coping to where he was awaiting us. I handed Miss Rideout, one of my employes, to him across the gap, my son followed with a little boy who worked for us, and Miss Maggie Love was then helped on to the pole. We all slid down and were saved.

"Our loss will be about $500," he added. "We could get no insurance on it because of the heavy risks on the entire building, but have an arrangement with the Partridge people that covers us to the extent of $2500.

Jumped From the Third Story.

Miss Bessie Alves was one of seven girls who were employed by the Lariat Manufacturing Company in the Ames building, and who jumped from a third-story window in order to save her life. She had a pretty close call, however, although she came out of the excitement with nothing more serious than a sprained hip. She said:

"All the male members of the party crawled out of the windows, and escaped by sliding down a pole which stood near the building. One of the girls followed them, and four of us jumped into the street. I know positively of three of us girls who did this, and that leaves two out of the shop about whom I know nothing, but who, followed our example.

As I Stood on the Window Coping.

A man jumped from above struck me on the head, I looked down and saw him dashed to death on the pavement.

"Another young man jumped from over my head and was caught on the wires. When I jumped I never expected that I would live to tell of it.

Still, I felt that there was no chance for me if I stayed waiting on the window, while I knew that I could only be killed by jumping. And this seemed less terrible to me, so I took the chance.

Miraculous Escape From an Electric Cable in Mid Air.
District Chief John F. Egan, as soon as he arrived at the building, went to the roof of Brown, Durrell & Co.'s building, with one of the employes for the purpose of opening the roof hydrants. Before he could escape from the roof after locating the hydrant, a portion of the roof fell in, and he found himself and the unknown employes of the firm wholly cut off from escape to the street.

Vainly he called for ladders, while the immense crowd shuddered at the sight and lifted their hands toward the roof in an attempt to attract the attention of the firemen.

For some reason or other no ladder was at hand, and in his desperation he climbed out on to the eaves of the roof, and threw his hat into the street to attract the attention of the firemen but without effect.

The flames in the meantime became so hot that he was forced to change his position, and he ran around to the Kingston street side of the building where he saw a cable wire running across to the building on the opposite side of the street.

Realizing that it meant either jumping a distance of eight stories and being dashed to pieces on the pavements below or an attempt to cross upon the cable, he shouted to the young man whom he supposed was just behind him.

Shin Out and Save Your Life and I will follow you!

Hastily turning around he saw that the young man had disappeared, and was probably swallowed up in the terrible flames.

Chief Egan grabbed the cable and crawled out to its centre where he hung suspended nearly a hundred feet above the street.

My Strength was Failing.

"I had made up my mind to let go my hold entirely, when a sudden gust of wind covered me sparks and enveloped me in a great cloud of smoke.

"At that moment I felt the wire giving way, and concluded to hold on, and so braced myself for the swing against the building. Before I realized it, instead of going forward, I found that I was going backward.

"Then I knew that the wire had not been burned off, but that the men had cut it, and they lowered me inch by inch until my back touched the building.

A Burning Hell of Fire.

"Oh, my God, what a burning hell of fire," said a grizzled, time-worn fireman, standing on the foot step of the water tower as that big rumbling machine turned into Lincoln street from Summer, five minutes after the first alarm was sounded.

NOTES AND NOTIONS

Running Comments on Passing Events

Sundry Ebulitions in Prose and Rhyme.

How the Domestic, Social and Literary World is Wagging.

The Care of a Piano.

To keep a piano case in good order great care must be taken in the application of so called "piano polish," which is constantly being off-red for the purpose of making the instrument look bright. A very little polish should be used, and that must be rubbed off well with a soft woolen cloth. The best way to clean a piano is to use lukewarm water and a fine oil chamois. Go over the case a little at a time and rub dry with your chamois skin. Bruises may be removed by the application of a little pumice stone. Always use a silk duster for a piano.

Examine Your Bees.

Beekeepers should make an examination of their bees as soon as the weather admits of it. Bees on their summer stands have consumed more food this winter than during the same length of time in any previous winter that I have any knowledge of. Hives that were rather light last fall are almost destitute of stores now, but the bees are strong and healthy and it will not pay to let them starve after they are almost wintered.—Mirror and Farmer.

Foolish Women.

A New York woman wears a ring in which is set in a circle of diamonds her first baby's first tooth. A London lady of high degree wears set in the jewels of her bracelet a tooth extracted from the month of her pet poodle. Another affectionate creature uses the skin of a once favorite horse as a hearth rug for her boudoir, and has a deficient pet pug mounted in a lifelike attitude by the taxidermist for an ornament on her writing table.

Novelties of the Hour.

A driving glove with the side pieces of the fingers made of roughened India rubber to prevent slipping of the reins. A retouching device, consisting of a handpiece with curved base and a stylus operated by an electro magnet and spring.

An automatic match lighter, operated by a small lever, by which the match is taken from the holder and ignited.

A fire-kindling device, comprising a long wire handle attached to a loop which holds a material suitable for absorbing inflammable substance for liquids.

A machine for rolling and bending metal into spiral forms, combining a set of rolls for shaping the metal with guides and a chamber for receiving the coil.

A bicycle footrest and lock combined, the rest being hinged to the fork so that it may be turned over until it projects between the wheel spokes where it is locked by a key.

A fan, with belt and pulley, attached to a baby coach in such a manner that the progression of the coach causes the fan to revolve over the head of the child in the vehicle.

An Historic Lemon.

Who ever thinks of connecting such a commonplace article of diet as the lemon with the romantic history of ill-fated Anne Boleyn? Yet, indirectly she was the cause of its first introduction into England and so into popular notice. Henry the Eighth—who if he rid himself of his wives like a brute, certainly won't feast and pageants in honor of the coronation of Anne, and of their previous nuptials as had seldom been accorded to queens of the royal blood. These kindly entertainments were in turn followed by the great civic feasts of London, for which the whole world was searched for delicacies to add to the splendor. At one such banquet, graced by the presence of the royal pair, a lemon was introduced as an elegant novelty. To an epicure such as Henry the acquisition of a castle in France would have proved less acceptable, and such was the importance attached to the discovery—so says an old biographer—that a special record was made of the fact that the cost of this precious lemon was six silver pennies.—Kate Field's Washington.

Furniture Warerooms.

Allen Bros. furniture warerooms Queen street, just below Oak Hall will be opened to the public to-day. A double entrance has been put in and from the door to the attic the building has been finished and tastefully decorated. Upon passing up the stairs, which are beautifully carpeted, and entering the door upon the right, we find ourselves in a handsomely decorated room about twenty-five feet wide and running the whole depth of the building. Here can be seen a magnificent line of sideboards bed-room sets, etc., in oak. Passing across the hall we enter another department in which parlor furniture of the latest style and in great variety is tastefully displayed. The upper flat is stocked with common furniture.
