

DOULTRY & BEES

SIMPLE BROOD FRAME.

Description of One That Can Be Put Together by the Amateur Without Any Expense.

I have been working the past winter to devise a hive that would come within the scope of those possessed of ordinary skill and tools.

Take a board of suitable size and nail on some cleats, as indicated in Fig. 1.

Make a miter box the width of the frame—say seven-eighths or one inch. Nail a piece in the bottom of one end for a stop.

For the end posts make another gash at the right distance from the stop. For the brace pieces you will need another box about an inch and a quarter wide.

degrees; shove it into the box to the stop, and saw it off; then turn it over, saw again, and so on, you will get the corner pieces.

As to construction, you lay the top piece in its place on the board, and the side pieces in their places, and nail on the corner pieces; then nail the top to ends and turn over and nail on bottom, and you have a strong frame, as indicated in Fig. 2, that will space itself in the hive and stay there.

As regards size, authorities differ. I made mine 16 inches long because that was the length of four honey boxes, and nine inches deep, because that was the depth of the hive.

Catching Rats on the Farm

Set your steel trap in a corn-sack. Roll in the mouth of the sack until a space is left just large enough to contain the trap. The rat sees the ears of corn through the trap, and in reaching for them strikes the pedal with his nose.

What Subsoiling Does.

Moisture may be retained in the soil by subsoiling, plowing, harrowing, cultivating, mulching, rolling and by the addition of humus or decayed vegetable matter.

Fertility from Roadsides.

On a very much traveled road there is a great deal of excrement dropped from the horses used in drawing vehicles and from other animals driven thereon.
