Bloodshed at Bath.

The Poor Hoboes Have a Hard Time.

July 25 and 26 were very exciting days in this place, one man, a "hobo," nearly losing his life from a terrible gash through his ear and temporal artery and another "hobo" arrested and tried on a warrant for having committed the deed. The facts of the case are as follows:

Two tramps, Sam Thompson and Jack Travers by name, were stealing a ride on the train from Perth on their way to St. John where they claim to belong. At Bath they were put off the train three different times but before the train had gone very far they managed to get on again. Before the train had got far from the station, about half a mile, one of them, Sam Thompson, was seen by one of the trainmen sitting upon the steps of the baggage car and was ordered off. He jumped from the steps near Miss Giberson's dress making establishment, and falling struck his head on a piece of glass cutting his ear completely across and severing the temporal and other arteries in front of his ear. He stanchd the flow of blood as well as possible and proceeded up the track to Dr. Cummins office, where from weakness he fell upon the floor before he could be placed upon a sofa. He was absolutely drenched with blood but Dr. Cummins assisted by Dr. Atkinson, who was in the neighborhood, succeeded in tying the arteries and resuscitating the unfortunate victim.

His "pal" who had been riding under the cars came looking for him and was arrested by Constable Gray on a warrant sworn out by C. Milberry. The reason of this was that the doctors both declared that the wound was more probably done by a knife, and evidence of other parties in town which conflicted with that of the "hobo."

Consequently the same evening an examination was held by Justices Shaw and Corbett in Dr. Cummins' office but on motion of J. J. Gallagher, who was prosecuting for the crown, the trial was adjourned till nine o'clock Wednesday.

Constable Gray and Harry Smith took charge of the prisoner over night and the wounded man slept with the prisoner.

On the next morning the postponed examination was held at Pat Corbett's store before the same magistrates. There was some very damaging evidence given showing that it was impossible for the injured man to have fallen off the train where he said he did as he had been seen near the station after the train had gone to far for him to catch it. However, the victim swore that his pal and himself were always good friends and that he had not inflicted any injury on him, but that he had jumped from the train and falling cut his ear and face. They both admitted being drunk and after Justice Shaw had delivered to them a nice temperance lecture, he dismissed the case. After the trial Jack Travers scooted towards Woodcock, and left his chum at Bath where he is under Dr. Cummins care.

J. J. Gallagher made a good prosecution and John Farley, J. P. defended the prisoner with success.

Cash.

I do not advertise any particular day in which I give special bargains. I have made it a practice to give special bargains or discounts for cash at all times to all persons favouring me with a share of their patronage. When in town kindly call and inquire prices, and inspect one of the finest assorted stocks of general merchandise on the St. John river. No special day, come when most convenient.

Yours Resp.

C. HUMPHREY TAYLOR.

Prop. of Hartland Farmers' Exchange

A Correction.

Miss Edna White of the class of '96 a graduate of the University of New Brunswick, took a teachers license of the Grammar School Class when nineteen years of age. So without doubt, Miss White of Sussex, and not Mr. Hamilton (as the 'Sentinal' says) was the youngest person in this province who has ever taken that license. Besides Miss White, several young ladies and gentlemen have taken the Grammar School license when about twenty-one.

STUDENT.

Leg Broken.

On Monday last W. W. Melville, who drives a rather nervous horse, was getting into his buggy in front of Fred Phillips' store in Bristol, when his horse took fright and dragged him between the wheels for about a mile. Besides a general bruising it was found that he had broked the small bone in his left leg. He now goes around on crutches.

The Bridge.

The so called "lower site" selected by the Hartland Bridge Co., has been sanctioned by Governor-in-council and it is expected the company will proceed to buy the approaches and that tenders will be asked for in the near future.

Dewey's Age.

Admiral Dewey is not as young a man as many would think from his deeds of valor. He will be sixty-two next December.
