A Model Country Store, We lately paid a visit of inspection to the store of C. A. Phillips and Son, at Pails and other goods, that occupy too much space to allow of their being kept in the retail part of the establishment.

 The stock of goods kept here somewhat surprised us, and we expressed an opinion that it was very large, for a country store, but, were assured that it was not an abnormally large stock, when the constant demand was taken into account.
 The ground floor of this establishment

On ascending to the upper floors over the shop, we found it divided into compartments for the different branches of business. In one of these we noticed an extensive display of Ready made Clothing, full suits as well as single garments, in endless varieties of material, make and fashion. In one apartment is shown a large quantity of Rubber Goods, while another contains an extensive display of and were highly gratified by the appearance of business enterprise and tact, presents itself to visitors. The whole from basement to roof, is now to the exigencies of the rapidly growing business; the partners residing at a distance from the business premises —perhaps we ought not to mention this during the burglary season—this very fine business building is a commodious, and well appointed store, such as we (in simple ideas) hardly expected to find, so far away from a city or large town.

The basement which we first inspected is a large, roomy well lighted warehouse which contains a large heating apparatus that not only keeps this portion of the premises at a comfortable temperature, but also serves to heat the whole of the superstructure; it is a most elaborately constructed affair, with many branches of bright tinned-iron pipes, starting from it, to convey the hot air to the various apartments overhead. We presume these pipes are used in obedience to the precept taught in works on natural physics, viz:—"Bright and polished bodies reflect more, but radiate less." hence they convey the heat with but a small amount of loss. This large basement is used also as a ware-room for all heavy goods, such as Hardware, Paints, Oils, Glass, Earthenware and for bulky articles as Washtubs mouths, when the juveniles peep in the elegant glass cases in which they are exhibited,

 In the rear of this prettily fitted up store, is a comfortable and well furnished office, where the book-keeping and correspondence of this extensive concern is conducted.

Being Economical.
 True economy consists in buying the best goods, in the best market, and at the lowest price. This method is almost universal, but to use such goods too free is not economy. The following story as just received from Lancashire, is a very apt illustration.

To reduce expenses a careful couple e t'habit o' drinking ale ta supper having heard that they'd save tuppence a quart bi gettin' a barril, they ordered one to be browt. T'fust neet after they'd had their quart, t'wife said, "Billy we've saved tuppence." "Soa we hev lass, shall wi tak another quart an save tuppence moor.

 tion, as well as with spitting of blood, the effects of this remedy are very marked.
