More Weather.

The "Beautiful Snow" has come at last, after a great deal of weary waiting. We have been often told that no snow can come till Mr. Cyrus Bartt arrives on the scene, we are not sure that he has put in an appearance yet, not having seen his genial countenance; but we suppose he must be somewhere in the locality by the good supply of snow. It has been a common remark that the lumbermen were beginning to look blue, on account of the dearth of snow. If it is true that it can't come without Mr. Bartt, in the future, they would do well to secure his presence here in good time. Notwithstanding that it has been rather late in coming, we shall doubtless, have enough of the beautiful before spring opens.

CUSTOMS AGAIN.

In our earlier numbers we often had occasion to inveigh against the antiquated custom's system adopted in this part of the province. We have not had much intercourse with custom-house authorities of late, but what little we have had has not been entirely satisfactory. We have however, just met with another instance of their rapacity and injustice. A small parcel of unglazed pasteboard, that cost twenty-five cents, came through post and the custom-house officer had the consummate impudence to demand Eighteen cents for duty. This with postage on the reply, postage on the article, and on the letter ordering it, more than doubling the cost of the goods. On a former occasion the same honestish individual had the audacity to endeavour to charge Sixty cents duty on a pound of printing-ink which cost fifty cents in Boston. We don't pose as a solitary martyr, because we know that hundreds of other people experience the like generous treatment, but we do think that such effete officers, should be replaced by men having some common sense business abilities, and are capable of ascertaining something like the commercial value of the goods they have to appraise. Better still, an election will shortly be upon us; Let the electors vote only for men who will promise to modify or abolish this 'rotten system.'

The War in Ashantee.

The war parade in Ashantee as predicted in our leader, was quickly disposed of, and the King, and several important members of his government are held as hostages till the 50,000 ounces of gold as an indemnity is paid. Twenty-three years ago a British force marched to Coomassie and stipulated terms to King Coffee, the conditions laid down were never carried out, and it became necessary for the present king to be dealt with in a summary manner. Fortunately, this was effected without bloodshed; but, at a fearful cost to the Royal Family of England. One of the Queen's daughters has lost her husband, not by the enemy's weapons; but by the deadly malarial fever of the strip of country lying between the coast and the kingdom of Ashantee.

Death of PRINCE HENRY.

"By the mighty minster's bell,
Tolling with a sudden swell;
By the colours half-mast high,
O'er the sea hung mournfully;
Know a Prince hath died!

By the drum's dull muffled sound,
By the arms that sweep the ground,
By the yolleying musket's tone
Speak ye of a soldier gone
In his manhood's pride."

The death of Prince Henry of Battenberg, husband of Princess Beatrice, came as a dreadful, and unexpected blow upon the Royal Family. The Prince has never been very popular in England, nor even in his native Germany; and with a view to increase his popularity with Englishmen, he volunteered for service with the Ashantee campaign. An attack of coast fever necessitated his immediate return to Cape Coast Castle, where he shipped for England, but a relapse of the disease carried him off before the vessel reached Madeira.

It is a sad blow to the widowed Princess, and a lamentable termination to a brilliant career at it's opening.

"The path of glory leads but to the grave."
