The Schools

The schools will open on Monday next.

The Weather.

The weather wise say we will have glorious harvest weather when the new moon comes in.

In Luck.

Those who held their salmon over are row in luck. Salmon now is worth 35 cents a lo. in New York.

Hemlock Shipments,

Mr. T. B. Williston purposes shipping several hundred cords of hemlock bark to Boston if he can get vessels to charter for that purpose.

Tho Press and the Pulpit,

Two of the St. John dailies are edited by extinct clergymen; while the editor of the Monton Times is we learn a kind of a local preacher.

Returning.

We are glad to hear that Mr. Roberts principal of the grammar school has had much benefit from his holidays; and returned here today, with Mrs. Roberts, completely himself again. He resumes his duty on Monday.

Accident

Mr. William Purcell while engaged at work on a vessel at Douglastown, was today severally jammed between two scows, injuring his leg very much. He was immediately conveyed to Dr. Benson's, where he received medical aid.

Reel Factory.

There is some talk of the establishment ot a spool factory, in or near Chatham. If the making of reels pay anywhere, it ought to pay here, wood is so abundant near us, and labor so moderate.

Consecration,

The consecration of the Rt. Rev. Roland McDonald, Bishop elect of Harbor take part in the consecration. The Rev. Mr. Ryan, S.J., will preach the consecration sermon .- Freeman.

The Andover

du Vin on Wednesday. The steamer was taking a number of persons, among whom were several clergymen, down to confirmation. But the water became very rough by time Shelldrake Island was reached, and the captain was obliged to put about. There was much disappointment on board, and not a little fear.

Fishy

The Sun gives a diagram of a huge codfish to represent the location of the assassins bullet in the body of President Garfield. Somebody has evidently been playing a very fishy joke on the editor of the Sun. By the way, a few days ago the editor of the Sun apologized, because a writer in its editorial columns made some disparaging remarks on Scotch Presbyterianism. Yet the Sun can libel Irishmen and Irish Catholicism social standing" from others at that The sun came out fitfully, and the with impunity and no apology is neces sary. Why this thusness?

The Bathurst Mine.

It is not unlikely that Mr. S. Adams will make a thorough examination of the newly discovered mine in Bathurst. it promise well, it may be he will remain here and indentify himself with it. It is we learn the opinion of Dr. Bailey and other geologists, that there are rich desposits of ore in the neighborhood of Bathurst. There what is known as the "mineral belt" become compactly defined. Mr. S. McCully has specimens of the Bathurst ore.

VISIT TO LORD ARDILAUN'S ESTATE-THE VALUE OF THE LAND-THE IRISH CAOINE OR "KEENE"-DOWN LOUGH CORRIB-ANNABREEN CASTLE.

here; it is very stony land. I was pointed out a field which was not very stony. comparatively speaking, but still had more stones, or stony crust rather, than a good farmer would desire. I was told it paid £2 per acre. I wondered how it is possible to raise rent and taxes off these fields, never to mention the support for farmers. The land requires stimulating manure to produce a crop. When bad years come, and render the tenant farmer unable to purchase guano, the crops are worthless almost. The necessity for buying artificial manure is a terrible necessity that American farmers know nothing of. I daresay the tenants expect too much in many instances, for they are accustomed to be treated as children in leading strings. The amount of dependence on this one and that one in superior stations is very wonderful, but their utter helplessness to take the first step toward better times is also wonderful. I have heard of men, by the last bad seasons unable to buy guano, having these ruins are considered the most beau-Full many a flower is born to blush to strip the roofs off their houses that tiful and most perfect in Ireland. the rain may wash off the soot into the land to fructify it. LOUGH CORRIB.

She says it was a very windy day, tations of larch and fir standing close and packed in shadow. The wind was so strong that the little steamer seemed to plough her way with a bobbing motion like the coots on LoughHill. We had a fine view from the lake of Ashford demesne, and the castle looking still grander and newer in the distance, all its towers and pinnacles bathed in the cold sunshine. I was pointed out in the distance from the lake, Moytura house, the home of Sir William Wilde; it stands where was fought the battle of Moytura in ancient times. The most important should have dearly liked to land here, for e e are the ruins of two very ancient churches. The oldest is called Church of Saint Patrick. It is said by some, who think they knew, that the style and architecture of this church prove it to have been built at the time of that saint. In the churchyard of this church is a monumental stone, one of the oldest Christain monuments in Ireland. It is to the memory of a nephew of Saint Patrick, the son of his sister Limenneh. The inscription describes the stone to be Lia Lugnaedon Mac Limeneuk. The other church is the deck of the little steamer while the wind blew in the teeth of the little boat and made her shiver and rock, and I endured sharp neuralagia pain, and lost my vail, which was blown off and went sailing off into the lake because I would not miss seeing all Lough Corrib had to show. I saw the ivy plaided walls of Caislean na Caillach, and on a little island the remains of an old uncemented stone port, so old that antiquity has forgotten it. The scenery was very grand, the islands grassy and round, or waving white trees, the lake covered with white horses riding with tossing manes to the shore; the little boat with its broad breast holding its own against the swells, the shores with green mountains checked off into fields, with higher mountains blue in the distance rising behind them. All under

The little steamer steamed up to wharf and backed and stopped, in most American fashion, at a lonely backwo.d. looking wha f, but the pillars for the snubbing rope were rillars of stone, and Razor in good preservation. There are also the walls of the bishop's residence here, me-this was the saint who discovered the happy land flowing with milk and honey, the key to which lies hidden in Cuneen Miaul's tomb-and the ruins of an extensive abbey, a monastery and a nunnery and other buildings. Truly the banks and islands of Lough Corribate made classic by ruins. They say the carved mouldings and stone work on passed, farther on, the ruins of Armaghdown, the castle fort of the bog.
