CANADIAN NEWS.

ONTARIO.

A curious incident occurred in Kingston recently, by which a man named Charon, a French man, believing, under a temporary fit of insanity, that he made too much use of his tongue, removed a portion of it with a knife, and would have done greater damage if he had not been discovered by his family. The bleeding was profuse, the man being faint from loss of blood before assistance could be given. Dr Phelan was sent for and attended to him. An Ottawa Government official is in possession of several historical relics, among which are a cane and umbrella which belonged to Napoleon I., and which were used by him at St. Helena; a dirk, the property of Lord Nelson when a midshipman; a cutlass used on board "Victory" at Trafalgar; the sword worn by Sir David Baird at the storming of Seringapatam, an Afghan knife taken from a prisoner at Lucknow during the mutiny, and the stiletto with which Spiletti stabbed Mr Ponsonby at Naples in 1831.

RAIN IN ADEN. A singular phenomenon is The North Star. reported from Aden. A heavy harness and edge of the carshower of rain has actually fallother inhabitants feel at a loss J E. COLLINS..... EDITOR to account for it. Such was the effect of the down pour that the air afterward became so cool that Europeans could tolerate a light overcoat, and Arabs and Abyssinians their cotton cloth, without feeling in the least discommoded. This is truly a wonderful state of matters for Aden which is the only station the British possess on the coast of Arabia It has the unenviable reputation of being the hottest place in the world. Situated at the southern bend of the Red Sea, not lar from the celebrated Bab-el-Mandeb, or Gate of Tears, which the Arabian and Indian navigators at one time never entered without believing that in all probability they would never survive either the shoals or the calm, stifling heat of the Red Sea. Aden is built at the foot of a bare volcanic rock, and is not much oftener visited by a refreshing breeze than it is by rain. British soldiers whose lot has cast them upon that bleak it spot of earth tell wicked stories about it One is that an Irish. man died "from drink, then said the climate killed him." When he had been buried for a time he reappeared as a ghost at the bedside of a former comrade, and beseeched that he might be given his great coat, "because afther Aden hell was cowld." Another is that the European residents music. are, in the absence of shady trees on the barren peninsula, accustomed to cluster under the lean flag-staff that stands on Mr John Costigan, M.
