

taken six months deliberation of the Government; a contract of which the Canadian Government, and the most upright and wealthy business men in the world are parties!!

THEIR HASTE.

If the scheme had not been conceived in fraud as it has been conceived, even their hot, indecent haste of the new contractors, might well form grounds for strong suspicions. In 1876 Mr. Mackenzie advertised for a Syndicate, and he

And 50,000,000 acres of land; He paid $10,000 out for advertising. Where then was the corruptist Colonel Walker, and the infamous H. H. Cook, that they did not come along and make an offer? Where then was this loyal party, now in Opposition, then a Government, that they did not form such a saving, cheap, wholesome, honest Syndicate?

Are they powerful only with the reins of power in other hands? Can they only form Syndicates when in Opposition? Where was this swift-footed Syndicate a year ago, when the whole house voted 100,000,000 acres of land, a grant which according to Opposition figures now was equal to $50,000,000? Why did the new Syndicate not come forward and offer to build for such a monster sum—or is it the patriotism of the corrupt Messrs. Walker and Cook, that makes them prefer forming a Syndicate for 22,000,000 acres and $22,000,000, $99,000,000 in all?

More patriotic, conscientious corruptists we have never heard of. Where were they all last summer when they knew the Government's mission was to form a Syndicate?—how can they make us believe that that scheme was born or bred in good faith and honesty, that was before the Government 24 hours after its birth? Think they we are fools, or that their frauds do not admit the light to shine through them?

And to crown their infamous work it was met and proper they should get Mr. Solicitor Leys to draw up the proposition and negotiate the terms. Have our readers ever heard of Mr. Leys? If our information be correct he has figured prominently in the Land Syndicate at Kamistiquia. He was the solicitor of the corruptists. There were a few acres of land out at Kamistiquia, little good for anything. Upon this land, was built the famous, Seebing Hotel—a structure formed out of slabs from a mill, hard by. [By the way the Grits were great slab dealers our readers know.] For the few acres of the slab hotel, the righteously Mackenzie Government paid SIXTY THOUSAND DOLLARS. Some of the slabs was resold, sold over three or four times, and paid for every time in good Dominion notes. The fellow who carried on the transaction was this same Mr. Leys, now solicitor for the new Syndicate.

SOME OF THE OBJECTIONS TO THE GOVERNMENT'S SYNDICATE. For example the Knight from the Tantramar. Sir Albert J. Smith complained that the Government was granting too much to the Syndicate, but Sir Charles stood up and reminded him, that he the very same Sir Albert in 1872 voted for placing 50 million dollars, and 50 million acres of land at the disposal of the Government to build the road.

The same Tantramar Knight, Sir Albert, said the Government had no authority to sign such a contract as they made with the Syndicate, but he collapsed when Sir Charles again stood up and said that Sir Albert's own Government in 1874 gave them by special act that very power.

The sneering Sir Richard Cartwright had said the Government was granting away too much lands, and Sir Richards party wanted these lands at $5 an acre, but the whole Grit force caved in when Sir Charles stated that Cartwright had refused to take back from Mr. Foster, the contractor for the Georgian Bay Branch, land previously purchased, although they were offered at 20 cents an acre, and this land of an average quality. So much for the present, for the old contract, and the new.

OPPOSITION WEAPONS VS THE OPPOSITION. The Opposition think it is an outrage for the Government to hand over the road to the company; but Mr. Millard, Ex-Minister some time ago declared we did cost the country four million a year beside the earnings to run the road!

THOSE PETITIONS. The number of names affixed to all the anti-Syndicate petitions before the Commons is 6,812. But in Canada there are 700,000 registered voters—so that one voter in seven hundred has petitioned against the Syndicate!

EIGHTEEN DAYS NOW HAS NORTHUMBERLAND WORN THE MOURNING ROBES.

A SCENE IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS WORTH READING.

MR. ANGLIN'S HATRED OF MR. JOHN COSTIGAN, AND MR. COSTIGAN'S EXPOSURE OF MR. ANGLIN'S SELFISHNESS.

In the course of a recent debate in Ottawa, Sir Albert J. Smith said the Government had no authority to make a contract with the Syndicate. Said Sir Charles rising, "Your Government gave us that power and the Toronto Globe, the organ by which every one of you swears says the Government had taken such authority. I will read the Globe," and he did read it; and the Globe said just what Sir Charles maintained it had.

Then says the Westmorland Knight in a fury, "I don't care who says so! The Globe is wrong." Mr. Anglin put in his voice and too declared "The Globe is wrong."

And then Sir Charles Tupper pointed to the records of the House and they showed that as the occasion suited, Sir Albert voted. He voted now with the Opposition; and again with the Government. He was loud in denouncing the extravagance of this contract and voted fifty millions of money and fifty million acres of land on another occasion!

Sir Albert was worked to his highest pitch. He said history proved how true he was and how little he cared for office or reward. "I was offered a seat in the Cabinet, and a Lieutenant Governorship to desert my party. I declined both. I appeal to Mr. Tilley to say if I do not speak the truth."

"O no, the hon. gentleman does not speak the truth," said Sir Leonard Fiske. "I did offer him a Lieutenant Governorship, but never a Cabinet seat."

"But what matters our proof against him?" said Sir Charles Tupper. "Let me read for you what his champion Mr. Anglin said of him once upon a time in the Freeman. Sir Albert was one of those who were prepared to sacrifice his character, honesty and reputation;" and that said Sir Albert did not hesitate to cover himself with infamy and wade through filth for a consideration. The Telegraph edited by a fallen clergyman is shocked at the vituperation of Sir Charles Tupper, whose crime consists in merely quoting what William Eldee's Reform confere said in other days of poor Sir Albert!

Of course Mr. Anglin made no reply to the quotations read from the Freeman; but he did say Sir Albert told him he had been promised Hon. Peter Mitchell's seat by Mr. Tilley. Sir Leonard rose in reply to this and said as he had said before, that the story was without foundation; and Sir Albert sat, and opened not his mouth upon the subject again.

THE SCENE BETWEEN MESSRS. COSTIGAN AND ANGLIN. It seems that Mr. Desjardins's a Frenchman and a Catholic, and one of the ablest speakers in the House, had handed Mr. Anglin without gloves charging that gentleman with being untrue to the separate school law, and the Catholics of New Brunswick, when the question of repeal of the School Law came up at Ottawa. It appears so long as Mr. Anglin was in Opposition and his school measure could not harm the existing Government, he worked with might and zeal with Mr. John Costigan to bring the matter to an issue. Meanwhile there came a change, The Government went out, the Opposition went in and Mr. Anglin with them. Mr. Costigan true to his principles always, and not caring what party he clashed with when duty and principle demanded his action, pressed forward his measure as he had done before, with Anglin at his side. But it was a changed Mr. Anglin he had to deal with then—not a Mr. Anglin of the Opposition with nothing to lose, but a Mr. Anglin, Speaker of the Commons, with the pay and the perquisites, the honor and the name of all at stake—with everything to lose. Mr. Costigan pressed his suit to Mr. Anglin. We are bound to this he said as men of honor and truth and in a better position to make our demands effective than ever before. "Take your time said Mr. Anglin—there is no hurry. It will come out right by-and-by." But the time went by, and it became plain that if Anglin lent himself to the introduction and support of the resolution, his party would be endangered. Separate schools might be secured as the result but he might lose his seat as Speaker, and $6,000 for printing contracts—contrary though the latter was to law, and the independence of Parliament.

Mr. Anglin shortly afterwards said, "I will not move there would be danger to me and danger to my party in the step; and then he set about to find a justification for his act. He represented to a Catholic Bishop of great intelligence and un-mixed zeal in the interests of his flock, that the measure could do no good now to bring it up—that the party then in power, by remaining in might be able to do something and that out of power they could do nothing. To bring the measure on would break up the party to no purpose"—and then loyally as a martyr in the days of the early persecutions he placed himself at the disposal of his prelate. He knew what the result would be; his statement of the case was a special plea for the result which was reached. That result was the answer; then don't bring forward the resolution—let it stand. And this is the great letter he has paraded so many times as a justification of his own treachery to the Anti-Free School people who cleaning on him and trusting in him found they had rested upon a rotten stick. Such was no doubt the tenor of Mr. Desjardins' scathing speech; and was it any wonder that when Mr. Desjardins sat down, Mr. Anglin arose in great excitement and challenged proof of such "monstrous charges."

It was after Mr. Anglin had thrown the challenge out, that Mr. Costigan arose. We have only a limited report on hand at present, but we shall publish the full text when we get it.

When Mr. Costigan rose to reply there was great excitement, and his speech was interrupted with frequent applause. He said he was sorry the question had come up, but he could make allowances for Mr. Anglin's reply to Mr. Desjardins.

Mr. Anglin in the most offensive manner do not want allowances from any one. This fairly roused Mr. Costigan's blood, who, raising himself to his full height brought his clenched fist down on his desk and exclaimed with vehemence: "It is not because the hon. member wants them that I make them, but because if I did not wish he could not compel me to make them. [Applause] I will not allow him to give the lie to statements I made in the House. He cannot defy me when he cannot maintain the position he took on the New Brunswick School question. I charge him with having grovelled FALSE to the trust reposed in him [Loud and tremendous applause.] He told his constituents that I was but a tool in his hands, and that he was the man to whom the Catholics looked to regulate that question. Well I asked him to regulate in the matter in Parliament, and he refused to do so. [Sensation.]

Mr. Anglin—That is not true. Mr. Costigan—He was engaged to, and I supported the Government of the day. Still I moved in the question myself, and he supported the motion so long as it embarrassed the Government, but he refused to support it any longer when it was likely to embarrass the Government of his own friends afterwards. [Cheers.]

Mr. Anglin—That is not true. Mr. Costigan—Had it not been for the school question he would not have been re-elected for Gloucester a second time, and he would never have sat in the speaker's chair; if he does not admit that, I can prove it.

Mr. Anglin—It is not true. Mr. Costigan—He charged me in the Freeman with making foul accusations against him and refused to reply. Then I went into his constituency, but he had the courtesy—not to say courage—of refusing me a hearing. [Hear, hear and cheers.]

Mr. Anglin—It is not true. You sneaked off when I read a letter from the Bishop of New Brunswick.

Mr. Costigan—I will leave this House and your own constituents to say whether or not I used such material as speaks are made of. [Loud cheers.] I have carried a constituency for twenty years which Mr. Anglin could not carry. I have carried it with out money and have ever acted simply with a desire to serve my people honestly and well. The accusation which I made against the hon gentleman I made in the full belief that I was discharging my duty to myself and to my constituents, and I do not intend to allow his statement to go unchallenged, because I know that if I do, the fact would appear in large type in his paper. I am willing to meet his challenge in a fair way. I am willing to go before his constituents or any other independent constituency in this country. I am willing to give him the benefit of all his eloquence and the ability and power he possesses.

Mr. Anglin—You have tried that before. Mr. Costigan—Yes, and I got a hearing when you tried to deny me a hearing. I proved my case and was cheered by the men who were to have voted for you and now if the hon member thinks he has gained anything by his challenge he is very much mistaken, and I promise all hearers a rich treat if we ever meet and discuss the question again.

It is painful to us to have to refer to a matter like this at all; but so long as the matter came up in the Commons, our readers would expect an explanation of some kind upon it.

One of the truest, most unselfish public men that has ever gone to Ottawa, is Mr. John Costigan. His whole political life has been a series of struggles for his principles, and for the rights of others. He has never secured anything for himself, though he might long ago have done so, had he left the rights of others and his own principles to the winds and worked for himself. Imagine the spectacle some years ago in Ottawa: John Costigan on the Government side, Timothy Anglin in Opposition. Mr. Costigan joining hands with Mr. Anglin, against his own party and against his own personal interests, and bringing forward a measure for the disallowance of the Free Schools Act—Mr. Anglin zealous in the cause, over-ready to assist him—the great champion of the Catholic people of New Brunswick. "Come ahead Costigan!"

The political wheel goes round, Anglin's party goes out, Costigan goes out. Then behold the spectacle. Mr. Anglin is in the Chair and is promised $6,000 for a printing job. Mr. Costigan goes to him. "I am ready Anglin, let us be moving; the time never looked so favourable as now for the success of our resolutions."

"Easy John; take your time. There is no hurry. We can see about this by-and-by." and later on the great Catholic champion and editor of the Freeman positively refuses to take hand, act or part in the Anti-Free Schools measures. Then the resolutions miscarried, and the advantage was lost never to come again. Look then on this picture and on this.

"SHOW THE MAN, WHERE IS HE? POINT HIM OUT TO ME!" SAID SNOWBALL EXCITEDLY, IN HIS LAST CAVASS, WHO DARES TO SAY I WILL GO TO ENGLAND SELLING MY DEALS, DURING THE SITTING OF PARLIAMENT.

A MOUNTAIN OF SILVER.

The captain of a whaling vessel just returned from the Arctic ocean to San Francisco says that, while the vessel was lying in a small bay at the mouth of one of the rivers which empty into the ocean on the coast of Alaska, he, one of the mates and four men went up the river to catch salmon. At the foot of a hill bordering on the river, they commenced fishing. While the sailors were engaged in this work, the captain and mate ascended the mountain which appeared to be 400 or 500 feet high. Arriving at the top they found what seemed to be the crater of an extinct volcano, and around there were evidences that at one time there had been a terrible eruption. In the crater itself the captain noticed that the rocks resembled congealed iron after it had been melted, and he undertook to knock off a piece, but could not do it, as it bent, and did not break with his repeated blows with the boat-axe. He then struck it with the blade of his axe, and actually chopped it off. He saw that the substance was as soft as lead, but it did not shine. He determined to bring it to San Francisco and have it assayed. One of the natives also brought him a piece of rock about 12 inches long by 6 inches thick, which weighed 48 pounds and sparkled with gold, stating that he had found it near another hill further up the river, and that such rock was plenty there. When the vessel arrived at San Francisco, the captain told his story to a gentleman living in Oakland, and the specimens were handed over to him for the purpose of having proper assays made. This was done, and the piece which the captain chopped off the top of the hill with the axe went $6,000 per ton in silver, and the loose rocks picked up on the side of the hill went as high as $275, silver, per ton. It seems then, that this hill is a mountain of silver, and that it is only the beginning of vast discoveries which will soon be made in Alaska, which may yet become the El Dorado to which thousands will rush. The Oakland gentleman spoken of immediately formed a party or company which has chartered the whaler to take a trip to the scene of the remarkable find as soon as the season opens.

"WHY GENTLEMEN," SAID HE, DOWN RIVER, "THEY EVEN WENT SO FAR AS TO SAY I WOULD GO TO ENGLAND SELLING MY DEALS AND THE PARLIAMENT IN SESSION!"

A SNAKE STORY. [Strait Times]. A sportsman, who penetrated into the jungle lying between Baddah and Sirangoon, came upon a lone hut in a district called Campong Batta, upon the roof of which the skin of an enormous boa or python was spread out. The hut was occupied by a Malay and his wife, who told the sportsman the following extraordinary story: One night about a week previous the Malay was awakened by the cries of his wife. Supposing, in the darkness, that she had been attacked by thieves, he seized his sharp parang and groped his way to her sleeping place, where his hands fell upon a slimy reptile. It was fully a minute before he could comprehend the entire situation, and when he did he discovered that the whole of his wife's arm had been drawn down the monster's throat, whither the upper part of her body was slowly but surely following. Not daring to attack the monster at once, for fear of causing his wife's death, the husband seized two bags within reach, and commenced stuffing them into the corners of the snake's jaws, by means of which he succeeded in forcing them wider open and releasing his wife's arm. No sooner had the boa lost his prey than he attacked the husband, whom he began encircling in his fatal coils, but, holding out both arms and watching his opportunity, the man attacked the monster so vigorously with his parang that it suddenly uncoiled itself and vanished through an opening beneath the thatch sides of the hut. The Malay's clothes were covered with blood, as was also the floor of the hut, and his wife's arm was blue with the squeezing it received between the boa's jaws. At daylight the husband discovered his patch of plain trees nearly ruined, the boa having in his agony broken off the trees at the roots, and in the midst of the debris lay the monster itself, dead. The Malay stated that he had realized $60 from Chinese who came long distances to purchase pieces of flesh on account of its supposed medicinal properties, and that he had refused $6 for the skin which he preferred to retain as a trophy.
