And the result is the people living at Mr. James Griffin has decided on important points between here and Essimply ignored. Their wants have not been brought before the notice of Dr. Fortin, before the notice of Hon. Mr. Langevin, before the notice of the Commons. Our member simply never lost a thought on them. Perhaps the people living between here and the sea shore, perhaps the fishermen buffeting the storms around the Point, and fishing along the coast, will assist again in sending Mr. Jabez Bunting Snowball "to Ottawa!" O, if ever there was a people who have got, and who are getting, and who may expect to get, what they deserve, it is the Electorate of Northumberland. mills. Now every man who cares about good government and honest and intelligent representation, every industry in the county rises up and denounces him. His record is as black as broken promises, falsified pledges and total indifference to every interest but his own, can make it. Indeed it is not often that one has heard of a career like his. He has been less than three years a member now, but in that time he has done enough, to blacken a political career of half a century. It was not bad enough for him to shatter the solemn and sacred pledges he made on the hustings to the wind, and go off to England just after the Parliament opened, it was not bad enough that he should remain away till just before it closed, but in the "wee sma' hours" that he had, after the Railway discussion had ended and the contract passed, after the Finance Minister had made up his estimate, -and forgotten about Northumberland because there was no one to remind him of it, -he must sit like a mute figuring away at his own private in voices; while time yet remained to call attention to two or three matters of importance to his county.

A RARA AVIS-GOODBYE TO RAMELTON.

Loch Swilly and its Romantic Scenery.

MAIDS OF THE HILLS, ETC.

(From Cor. Montreal "Witness.")

As I bid a final good-bye to bennie Ramelton and turned my back to northern Donegal, all around me were waiting breathlessly on the Land Bill. The tenure of land, instances of the unfairness of the law, of the tyranny of certain landlords is the ruling topic, travel where I may. Left Ramelton at seven o'clock Monday morning, April 4th, the hoarsteamer. The caoin was black with smoke that would not consent to go in content with the chill morning, the hoar irost and the deck. An old gentleman, passenger by this boat, struck up an acquaintance and told me of his personal sufferings under the land laws, and the facility with which men so disposed evaded any law that interfered with their will.

Before I leave bonnie Ramelton behind altogether, I must say that it has been in the past fortunate in a landlerd. Old

Inhabits the valleys of green Innishowen.'

From Derry to Moville is, as usual, lovely—lovely with a loveliness of its own. Fine old trees, singly, in groups, in thick plantations; beautiful fields, level clipped hedges, flowers springing everywhere, under the bedges, in little front gardens, up the banks. The land is dreadfully overrun with gentry's residences fair enough to the eye, some of them very beautiful, but one gets to wonder if the land is so poor that it is spueing out its inhabitants.

What supports all these? The wide Lough Foyle is in sight of the road most of the way, and a sea bound steamer carries me away in thought to Canada. The air is nipping enough to choke sentlment in the bud. It is bitter cold, and I have the windward side of the car, and shiver at the noddling daffodils in bloom. ing clumps at every cottage as we pass along. There are some waste unreclaimed fields, and the tide is out as we drive along, so that long stretches of bare blue mud. spotted with eruptions of sea weed, fit well with the cold wind that is enjoying a cutting sweep at us. Then we come again to trim gardens and ivy garnished walls. We stop and take up a lady and child, evidently expected, for the driver has kept the sheltered side of the car for her, and he takes such care to wrap her up in a rug, that I feel stranger in a strange land. The road follows the curves of the Lough, and people can amuse themselves watching the black steamers ploughing along, and the brown sailed little boats scudding before the breeze. The Lough is on one side and a remarkably high steep ridge on the other, yellow with budded whins, green with creeping iv;; and up on the utmost ridge a row of plumed pipes.

There would occur a strip of bare brown sand, and outside of that row upon row of sharp, thin, jagged rocks like the jaw teeth of pre-Adamite monsters. In other places they were piled on one another in such a sudden way, grass growing in the crevices, ivy creeping over them, the likeness of broken towers and ruined battlements, till one could hardly believe but that they were piled there by some giant race. When we had driven as far as the car could go we left car and driver, and scrambled over the rocks like goats. Rocks frowned above us, between us and the sky, rocks all around in black confusion. As we climbed from slippery rock to slippery rock, over long leathery coils of thick sea weed, like serpents, on, on through the Dorus to the open sea, noticing the dark passages, the gloomy caves, the recesses among the Harness of every description. cliffs, the narrow passes, where one could turn to bay and keep off many, it was natural to think of rebels skulking here, with a price on their heads, after the '98, or of lawless people stilling illicit poteen to hide it from the gaugers. Sheltered by the rocks of Port-a dorus, I could enjoy the sea air flavored with essence of sea weed. I must say that I neither saw nor smelled poteen either in the mountains of Donegal or the wilds of Innishowen; fitted. but not the less do I believe it is there, although we came on no still among the rocks of Port-a dorus.
