How To Keep A Meal Hot.

When it is necessary to keep a meal hot for a belated comer, do not set the plate holding the food in a hot oven, thus discoloring the china as well as drying the food. Instead place the plate over a pan of boiling water, covering the plate with a pan that will just fit over the edge of the plate.

The food will keep hot, and there will be enough steam from the boiling water in the lower pan to keep the plate moist and prevent its contents from being dried.

Pointers for Pork Raisers.

Mr. Armour, of the Armour Packing Co., Chicago, who visited Ontario some time ago, has written a letter to Mr. Hodson, superintendent of Ontario Farmer's institutes, in which he has the following to say about hogs and hog-raising.

"It was, however, a revelation to us to see the splendid condition and fine appearance of the Canadian hogs and we feel very sure that the Canadian system of careful breeding and feeding is the correct one. We have come to the conclusion that the best breed of hogs for the fancy export trade is a cross of a Tamworth boar and Yorkshire sow. The food for the first four months of the pig's existence would make really very little difference whether it be corn or smaller grains. However, from four months up to the time it is marketed, say for six months, we are of the opinion that the use of corn should be discontinued entirely and the animal fed on peas, barley or crushed oats, with a fair proportion of green vegetable food. We are also of the opinion that the weight of the hogs should not exceed 200 pounds, nor do we think that more than six hogs should be fed together in a pen, as then there is no crowding among them at feed-time, and it is necessary that the animal should be given all the comfort possible."

"We have seen some very fine hogs raised in dairy districts, and we believe that Ontario is singularly fortunate in this respect, having such a large number of dairy farms. These always bring good healthy pigs with a very fine quality of meat. The Canadian hog-raiser is away ahead of the American at present, at least in so far as the English market is concerned. The Canadian singled Wiltshires command a very high premium, and rank almost equal with the finest Danish bacon on the London market."

These views of an expert pork packer are deserving of attention on the part of Nova Scotia pork raisers in view of the efforts which are being made to establish a pork packing industry in this province.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—An official dispatch from Porto Rico says the Americans yesterday seized the Custom House in the village of Fajard, which place was without a garrison. An American column the dispatch also says, supported by artillery, advanced on Guaguama. The Spaniards made a brave defence but were forced to withdraw to Alturas.

PONCE, Aug. 7. General Brooke is moving north from Georgiana with ten thousand men.

BOSTON, Aug. 8. The steps for peace are taken but they step slow. The first steps will be the signing of a protocol providing for the suspension of hostilities. This protocol which will be signed by the Secretary of State and by the French Ambassador, representing Spain, will fix the agreement upon the terms named by resident McKinley and his cabinet. Spain will withdraw from Cuba, cede Porto Rico to the United States, leave this government in possession of Manila, a city, and bay, and enter on negotiations regarding the future of the Philippines. There will be no agreement as to the Cuban debt, and there will be no money indemnity. Then the important step will be the selection of Peace commissioners. The success of Administration and the future of the United States depends largely on the selection.

Mr. Bowman's Courtship.

There was a man in our small town and he was wondrous wise, he jumped into a bramble bush and scratched out both his eyes. He jumped into the bush once more but could not scratch them in again.

Mr. Bowman had been a widower many years. Many means from two to a hundred, when he became acquainted with the little widow who kept the country post-office. The sky, the trees, even the grass had a different look, after his weekly trips for the mail of which he was carrier.

He used to be unaccountably nervous and depressed. His widowed bosom filled with a vague unrest,

And like a youthful swain, His thoughts ran riot with his brain. His daughters two him ceased to please, And the neighbors boys him oft did tease.

From room to room he'd wander around stopping before the mirror about ten times a day, congratulating himself that the reflection in the glass may captivate any woman, though in the social world she may be above him. How was he to put the momentous question troubled him night and day. He read poetry, looked all the old novels over but still nothing satisfactory could he find, but an unforeseen event helped him where poetry and novels failed. One day he found the widow with a clucking and protesting pullet under her arm. "Good morning Mr. Bowman, I am glad to see you, perhaps you can tell me how to make this hen stay on the eggs until the eggs are hatched. She has been setting some time and now she has left them, this makes the third time she has been off this morning. Now Bowman's wife had always seen to the feathered family so he knew but little about them. But with a sudden burst of inspiration he said "why not fasten her on." "Oh thank you I thought of doing so but was not sure it was right. Just hold her a minute while I hunt a rope to tie her down with." The next thing Bowman knew he was alone feeling foolishly happy with the bally hen clasped in both hands, while he pondered for an inspiration that would help him to propose. "I suppose the surest," he said as the widow returned, "would be to bore two holes in the bottom of the nest, then stick her legs down through and fasten them under the nest." "But I am afraid the eggs would fall through," said the widow. "I was just thinking the same myself. A barrel will be the thing then we can cover and fasten it down, then she will have to stay whether she likes it or not." Now as he stood bursting with aspirant thoughts, Sir Walter Raleigh and his quotation came to his mind. He had no diamond nor window near, but still the words seemed to him so clear, so with his hand on his vest pocket where he thought his heart should be, he said, Mrs. Jamison, I faint would climb but am afraid to fall—yes I faint would climb, is not that the way Sir Walter put the aspiration of his heart. Mrs. Jamison, I like him on bended knee express my adoration for thee; "Mr. Bowman," said the widow, "the days of Queen Bess have passed and gone, men do not throw their cloaks on the ground nor do they get on their knees. Pray do not be foolish again." In due time the little chicks came out and Mr. Bowman almost wished he had been a chick for then the hand of the gentle widow would have fed him, but he has ceased to climb and has settled down into the daily routine of life a wiser if not a happier man.

Traffic At London Bridge.

It is computed that about 200,000 pedestrians and 20,000 vehicles cross London bridge every day. Each leaves behind a little shoe leather or a little iron—just a trifle. But when litter and dust are added to these minute losses the whole fills between three and four carts. The most surprising fact of all, however, is that the incessant traffic across the bridge reduces to powder about 25 cubic yards of granite every year.
