GAGETOWN, JULY 2TH, 1897

E. G. SCOVIL, Agent Pelee Wine Co., Dear Sir—My wife has been afflicted with nervous prostration for several years, using every kind of medicine recommended, but obtaining no relief until I procured some of your Pelee Wine, which I am delighted to say, has had the desired effect. It is the greatest tonic of the age, I think too much cannot be said in its praise and no house should be without it. We have recommended it to several suffering from a gripple debility, with like good results.

I am, yours gratefully, JOHN C. CLOWS.

MONCTON Woolen Mills, SPRING 1898!

I have much pleasure in again informing my customers and the public generally that I have made an arrangement with J. A. Humphrey & Son for the handling of their goods for the coming season—west of the St. John River. My stock this season is large and personally selected with a view to your requirements which my dealings with you for the past three years enables me to do and will be sold at prices lower than former years—while the quality has been kept up to the regular standard—goods being made from pure wool; also new and attractive patterns added. I would ask you to see our goods and prices before purchasing and in so doing I feel assured that you will continue to favor me with your esteemed patronage which you have so generously done in the past.

Yours truly, ALFRED P. SLIPP, Upper Hampstead, N. B.

Rise up ye Women that are at Ease

REMEDY FOR THE WHISKEY EVIL. By Prof. J. I. D. Hinds, Cumberland University, Lebanon, Tennessee.

Statement of the Question. The principal remedies which have been proposed for the whiskey evil are as follows:

- 1. Free whiskey with moral suasion. 2. Government control by high license. 3. Partial prohibition. (a) By exclusion from the vicinity of certain institutions. (b) By local option. 4. Total prohibition.

ARGUMENT.

1. The argument for free whiskey and the control of intemperance by moral suasion would be perfectly valid were not the evil so enormous. So long as any evil may not materially affect the good of the people, the State may well refrain from legislation in regard to it. But extreme conditions demand extreme measures. It has been the common experience of mankind that moral suasion will not control intemperance. From the very nature of the case it cannot, for man is depraved and prone to run into evil. He is particularly liable to be led away when the tempter is so insidious as in alcohol, and when the thing appealed to is man's appetite. If moral suasion cannot control the greater crimes, such as murder, theft, arson, and violence to person, how can it be expected to control intemperance? This remedy cannot avail until the millennium shall come.

2. The second remedy is the one which has usually been used, and under license the reign of alcohol has flourished as it never did before. License has been thoroughly tried, and watered by its influence, the tree of intemperance has grown with a luxuriance unprecedented in this goodly land of ours. And why? Because license is wrong per se. No State has justly the right to license that which increases crime, impoverishes the people, and causes the degeneracy of the race. A State might ignore such things, but certainly has no right to sanction and legalize them. I am, on principle, distinctly and emphatically opposed to licensing the whiskey traffic in any manner whatever. If it is a legitimate business, it should be taxed only as other business is taxed. If it is an evil, it should be licensed under no consideration. I believe that the license laws have been largely the means of making intemperance the gigantic evil which it has become in our country. License made the saloons; the saloon makes the drunkard. And with the saloon has been associated all that is sinful, abominable, criminal, and hellish on earth. I say, away with the saloon and the license which makes it.

What does high license do? It legalizes and makes respectable a traffic which is wrong in the eyes of God and man; it puts the profits in the hands of a few men, it makes the temptation to drink many times greater, and lays the snare the more adroitly for unwary feet—and all this without laying one restraint upon intemperance, without making the liquor one whit less accessible, and without diminishing the quantity drunk or the number of drunkards made. It only gilds the demon and makes him tenfold more damnable. It is license and revenue that have made possible those powerful combinations which have wielded the political parties and controlled the legislative bodies of our nation. But this is not all. License weakens and almost nullifies the power of moral suasion. When moral precept has the law to back it, its power is very great; but we all know how futile are our efforts when 'we try to persuade men against that to which their inclinations lead, and which the law sanctions. If we want moral suasion to have its proper effects, we must get rid of the licensed liquor traffic. License, instead of being a remedy, has but added to the evil.

3. I have now to consider those measures which have looked to partial or local prohibition. As representative examples we may take the four-mile law of Tennessee and the local-option law of Georgia. Such laws have produced a most wonderful effect. They have acted in three ways:

- 1. They have made a local prohibition possible, and have demonstrated the excellent results which always follow the removal of whiskey from a community. 2. As a consequence, they have been the most powerful cultivators of sentiment in the direction of prohibition. 3. They have demonstrated the fact that the only thing which can control the whiskey evil is legislation in the direction of prohibition. These laws have educated the people, and prepared them for the general prohibition which is their legitimate fruit. They are good as far as they go. They point in the direction of temperance and support moral suasion, but they are not sufficient, because they do not eradicate the evil. They do not go to the fountain-head. The great stream of alcohol flows on, and even places protected by these laws are liable at any time to suffer fresh undulations from this current which carries death and destruction in its course. We need a still better remedy.

4. Total prohibition is the only thing which effectually meets the case. All the serious objections to prohibition has been successfully answered. The supreme courts have decided that prohibitory laws are constitutional, and not sumptuary. Experience has shown that they are as easily enforced as any other law that affects the same number of people, and that where they have been in operation the most wonderful changes have been effected for good.

The argument that alcohol is useful as food and medicine is sufficiently and successfully answered by the bare statement of the fact, patent to all, that the evils resulting from its use are a hundred-fold greater than the good which it brings.

The claim that it contributes to the wealth of the country is also unfounded. Statistics show that it increases the taxes and tends to the impoverishment of the masses. Nothing can be a real source of wealth to the country which does not give to the purchaser an equivalent for the money he pays for it. Ordinary luxuries have an important place, for they tend to redistribute wealth and put money in the hands of the poor. If alcohol and diamonds always went together, it might be let alone. But this is not so. It associates with calico and homespun. The whiskey dealer fills his purse, not at the expense of the rich, but with the bread-money of the poor.

The question of personal rights must be settled upon the principle that they must yield to the general good. A prohibitory law is in exactly the same category with the law for abating nuisances and the one prohibiting the carrying of pistols. The will of the majority and the common good sufficiently justify all such laws. Prohibition restrains all alike. If it works a hardship upon individuals, it is their misfortune, and they are morally bound to submit. Whatever may be a man's personal rights, whenever he is brought into relationship with society he no longer has a moral right to pursue a calling which is detrimental to the best interests of that society.

But what personal rights are interfered with by prohibition? Two in particular. First, to become drunkards; second, to make drunkards. These are the prime functions of those who participate in the liquor traffic. I submit that all right-thinking persons will agree that the State not only has the right to interfere with such personal liberties as these, but that it is its imperative duty to do so.

The oft-reiterated assertion that prohibition does not prohibit is not true. That the law will be evaded, all will admit. But if by prohibition we can but diminish the evil one-half, it is well worth our while to try it.

Prohibition has been less effectual where it has been tried because it was local. Make the law general all over the land, and its enforcement will be quite easy.

The Complete Scorcher.

Well met, brother. I have long wished to convert you to the entertaining art of biking.

Nay, but I like it not. Give me a good horse, such as I now ride, that crooks not your back nor engenders humors of the joints. Besides biking is a tame sport.

Believe me, friend, it is nothing of the sort. Come you with me a few miles, and I will show you some pleasant pranks I warrant you.

Well, then, lead on. Here is a fair road, where be no street car lines nor fimits. Look you, there is a small dog. I will overrun it.

Cleverly done, o' my word! You struck him shrewdly. How he yelpeth. That is naught. Hold back, and I will make yonder dame swerve aside into a mud heap. There, did I not startle her finely?

In good sooth you did. She hath benighted one leg above the ankle and dropped her basket of eggs to boot.

Confess, now, that this is pretty sport. But I will show you something still more pleasant. Here is an old gentleman reading his paper in the middle of the road. He will not see me coming. Did I not bowl him over cleanly?

Aye, you say rightly. His profanity diverteth me mightily. But, sir, doth not this sort of thing injure the machine? Doubtless, but I care not. It is only one that I have hired. Tomorrow I shall get one from a different merchant.

Come, friend, why go you so slowly? See, there is a convoy of children coming out of school. Knock me down a brace.

Nay, my master, this is the parish of Reigate, in the which perverse and ignorant magistrates do malignantly oppress us poor scorchers.

You are jesting. I would I were! Believe me, sir, if I killed even one of those brats in this pestiferous place, I should have to pay a fine of several guineas.

If that be so, I'll have none of your biking. I care not to have my sport curtailed by every ill conditioned jack in office. Good day to you, master, and a safe journey.

CURIOS INDUSTRY.

A curious industry in China is the manufacture of mock money for offering to the dead. The pieces are only half the size of the real coins, but the dead are supposed not to know the difference. The dummy coins are made of tin hammered to the thinness of paper and stamped out to the size required.

The chocolate mill at Milford, Dorchester, Mass., shipped one hundred and sixty cases of chocolate, each weighing one hundred pounds, for New York. Sweets go in time of war but do not rise like bread. Why? They have no yeast in them.

On an average every woman carries from 40 to 60 miles of hair upon her head.

Brooch Bargains

Don't you need another Brooch? We have 24 that we will sell at $1.00 Each.

We paid more than that for them and thought the patterns very neat and pretty. We made a mistake in buying too many and patterns are changing. The quality is good—regular retail prices were from $1.50 to $3.00. We thought them pretty enough to wear anywhere. You'll think them at least pretty enough to wear about the house. Order by mail and if you are not satisfied we will return the money.
