

VIEW NEAR JUBBERA.

A VILLAGE IN THE HIMALAYA REGIONS.

Like to that visioned grand, Which was at Bethel given, Upon the earth these mountains stand, Their tops ascend to heaven!

And wondrous flowers that have no peer, Flowers meet for angels' hands, Spring forth, and blossom all the year, Amid these mountain lands;

Oh! fair and sumptuous mountain-land, To which such wealth is given: Whose lower hills like giants stand, Whose peaks ascend to heaven,

THE GARDEN-GIRL OF THE EDEN-BANK.

'Will you ride to Eden-Bank to-day?' said my uncle, the morning after his return from Kentucky. I laid down my book, and saddled my nag; for it was one of those bright May mornings, when a man seems to be as properly on horseback, as a bird upon the wing.

It was one of those gently rounded declivities which are often seen in the west, and it looped down to, and half enclosed a little prairie-spot of perfect green; upon the bank grew tall and massive trees, under which the sword spread innocent of underbrush; and through which the white-walled cottage was seen peeping; while upon the prairie there was not a shrub.

We found 'Daniel the unjust' at home; he was a big man, with a passionate, vacant face, neither strong nor amiable,—but working as though the fires of his heart had dried his brain up. He gave a surly welcome, and as my uncle came on business, soon left me to amuse myself with my riding whip.

'And what have you done for the orphan?' 'Nothing,' said my uncle; and so I jumped back to my dreams of killing tyrants, and cutting off the heads of old uncles; and somehow, I found I was doing it all for the dark-eyed lady of the golden bodkin.

Every day, for a week or more after this ride, I sought for an excuse to revisit the Eden-Bank; but none came, and my memory of the scene in the bower became as vague and as pleasant as if it had been all a dream.

I delivered my package, tied my horse to an oak, and wandering into the grove, half hoping, half fearing, to meet my nameless maiden of the hoe. I went to the bower, but she was not there.

However, a week convinced me that blithe lips did no good. I could not sleep, nor could I eat; I could neither think, read, work, nor shave; my skin became feverish, and my nails very long. These were bad symptoms, but they were nothing to what was going on inside.

'Are you in love with that jade?' growled Self-esteem. 'Will you lower yourself by marrying a common help?' whispered Approbation. 'Is it impossible you can think of a girl without education?' sneered the Intellectual.

It was not long before the British empire substituted, the British, equally sagacious, are not less awake to the importance of Egypt as a mortification of their Indian Empire. Many years will not elapse before the British will attempt to seize that country; and when once in possession, they will keep it.

Even as she was, I took my bride home, check apron and all. I left her in the parlour; and going to my uncle's room—"Uncle," said I, "Effie Stone's down stairs, and I'm going to marry her."

'And what have you done for the orphan?' 'Nothing,' said my uncle; and so I jumped back to my dreams of killing tyrants, and cutting off the heads of old uncles; and somehow, I found I was doing it all for the dark-eyed lady of the golden bodkin.

we had a little sober supper; at which my old opponent, Mr. Lambe, gave us a toast, 'Daniel Stone,—May he soon be a Daniel come to judgment.' It was a bad joke to him, but every one save poor Effie, laughed a great deal, and hoped it might turn out so; and so it did.

Somed ten days after our marriage, my uncle told me with a very long face that he feared we should have to go to law; though he hated to set a bad example. It seemed he had a clue to the will of old Stone, and hoped to get the Bank for me.

OUR RELATIONS WITH BRITAIN.

If any person doubts that Britain will improve the first convenient opportunity for quarrelling with us, let him consult her history for the last two centuries, and her conduct towards us in relation to the Boundary question. The first had been a continual series of aggression upon all whose weakness afforded a reasonable chance of success in a contest.

Considering all these things, what reason have we for supposing that the British have any special desire to spare us, or would treat us with more forbearance than they have treated and are treating others? They would have but two reasons for sparing us; magnanimity and interest.

Not doubting that war is at hand, at least war in disguise, we believe that, dateless as we are the sooner it comes the better. Our commerce would suffer. But we could now conquer all the Northern British colonies, because we should find numerous allies among them, and this conquest would be easier now, while a portion of the colonists are exasperated against the mother country, than it would be after a new system of colonial government shall have converted them into friends and allies.

The Archimedes Screw.—The Liverpool Standard has devoted considerable space to a clear and circumstantial account of this important invention. "We have much satisfaction," says the Standard, "in stating that the Government have at length decided in adopting it into the navy."
